1. Introduction and hypothesis.

The twentieth century has been a century of change, wars and innovations in mass media has changed the geopolitical and cultural landscape, in ways that would have been impossible not long ago. One of the largest actors in the international scene of politics in the twentieth century has been the United States of America. The power that the U.S. wields in the world is unquestionable, in both a military and a cultural sense, but what about the change in language and subsequently culture within the U.S.? In Wierzbicka’s article Angst (1998), where she tries to show relationship between words, culture and feelings, she states the following.

“Language – and in particular, vocabulary – is the best evidence of the reality of ‘culture’, in the sense of a historically transmitted system of ‘conceptions’ and ‘attitudes’. Of course, culture is, in principle, heterogeneous and changeable, but so is language.”

Here Wierzbicka sums up the basis of the hypothesis that if there has been a change in usage of a lexeme, then the conception of the lexeme has also changed. She also states that within the use of words we can find views of the world that are infused in the speaker’s culture. I hypothesize that there has been a change in usage and meaning in the lexemes freedom and liberty during the twentieth century. If the method used for this article is proven sound it means, that when looking at difference in usage between two words, or the change in meaning over time, it is important to look at multiple factors and multiple examples.

Section 1 is this introduction and section two will describe the collecting of data and the method used to analyze it. Section 3 will describe the results of the analysis and section four is the conclusion reached. Section 5 is the references.
2. Data and method.

To research whether there had been change or not during the twentieth century, I opted for a usage based method, which allows analysis of linguistic idiosyncrasies of the speaker. Since I am not a native speaker of English, nor do I hail from an English speaking country, I cannot myself produce examples that entail cultural heritage. I solved this by using a corpus that is based on articles by native speakers of American English. By using the corpus with a quantitative research method, we can look at the overall usage of a lexeme and discern patterns in usage across time. The similar method is used by Adam Kilgarriff in “I don’t believe in word senses” when discussing lexicographical research. In it, he explains “It regards corpus lines as points in space with measurable distances between them.” Looking at different features of the usages, you attribute the usages with different labels. Coding the examples according to these features allow the program “R” to create graphic plots and generate statistics which tells us the relationship between the labels ascribed to the features.

2.1 TIME magazine corpus

The corpus used in the article is the TIME magazine corpus. It allows for searches within specific periods and is constructed of usages created, or reviewed and edited by, native speakers of American English, which are both essential for the article. It is also one of the largest magazines in the U.S. in terms of circulation and it deals with topical articles relevant to the entire country. This suggests that it can be regarded as a representation of U.S. twentieth century culture. The TIME magazine corpus contains over 100 million different words taken from time magazine.

2.2 Collecting examples

From the TIME corpus 180 examples of each lexeme in use were gathered, 20 examples from each decade and lexeme. Meaning 20 examples from the twenties and 20 examples from the thirties etc. These were gathered from 1920 up until the first decade of 2000 (which is referred to as the two thousands in this article). During the collection of these examples there were some problems, there was a broken code in the homepage only allowing access to the first five years of examples in each decade. This did not pose a problem in gathering 20 examples from each decade though. Taking examples only from the first five years should show the difference over time more clearly. Another problem was quotes, which I avoided as much as I could but the limitation of only the first five years resulted in a few being used in the analysis. The danger of quotes is that the person quoted might not be a native speaker of American English, thus the examples in which a quotation was made were avoided. These however are not prevalent through the examples and should not affect the analysis to any great extent.

2.3 Analysis

As mentioned previously different features were ascribed different labels to allow them to be coded. This code was used to analyze the change over time. Here I will explain the different categories of labels and the labels themselves and show a summing up of the coding.

1. Lexeme

Labels the lexeme.

2. Syntax

Syntax shows us which word classes are used together with the lexemes in four different categories. Syntax_Lexeme_FINE and Syntax_lexeme_COARSE labels syntax for each lexeme separate and Syntax_FINE and Syntax_COARSE labels syntax overall for the whole model. Here classic or simple abbreviations are used when dealing with the syntactic relationships of freedom and liberty and words used with them. NP means noun phrase and Adj means adjective Prep means preposition etc.

3. Time

Labels the decade from which the example was taken from the twenties are 20s and the thirties are the 30s etc.

4. AbsVsCon

This category divides the examples into Abstract or concrete freedom or liberty. Abstract means that freedom or liberty is used in an abstract sense, whereas Concrete means a person’s freedom or liberty from incarceration.
Concrete _Non_Cap_ is a concrete freedom or liberty but not from incarceration.

5. ExpFine

ExpFine notes the patient and patient refers to the entity that experiences _freedom or liberty_ or the lack thereof. The patient is described according to three different labels. _Country_ means that the patient is a specific country, for example Sweden. _Society_ means that the patient is society in general, meaning it affects the whole world or groups of people that has members across the world, like the Catholic Church. _SpecHum_ is a specified human or a specified group of humans that does not have members across the globe, for instance a specific group of refugees.

6. ExpCoarse

ExpCoarse labels the example with _Animate_ when the patient is denoted as a living entity, for instance, a group of people referred to as a gathering of human beings. The other label, _InAnimate_, tells us the patient is denoted as not living, for instance, a group of people referred to as a named group.

7. Argument

The lexeme is labeled either an _object_ or a _subject_ in regards to English grammar.

8. Agentivity

The lexeme in use is labeled as an _Agent_ as in when the lexeme performs an action. “…of mind and our tradition of freedom; we accept a bunker culture in which liberty loses to suffocating security measures. We dishonor the memory of our dead by giving…”(TIME magazine) And when it is not performing an action it is labeled _Non_Agent_.

9. Theme

A category labeling the theme of the example, by theme I refer to the general topic of the example. _Society_ means that the theme is politics and social freedom and liberty. Economics means that the theme is economical freedom and liberty. Legal/Crime means the theme is criminality and legal issues.

10. Source_domain_fine

In this category I placed the fine grain analysis of the metaphor used in the example. (citation needed)

11. Source_Domain_Coarse

This category is where the metaphors are divided into bigger groups, using similarities in the metaphors to group them together. For instance, to have something or give something is something you normally do with a physical object and not with an abstract concept like freedom or liberty. That means that when the lexemes freedom and liberty are used with these verbs they are treated as, and thus, conceptualized as physical objects.

11.1 Coarse_Non

This label was used when there was no metaphor used in the example.

11.2 Manipulable_Object¹

If something can be given, taken, bought or sold then it falls under the category Manipulable_Object. If you can have freedom or give freedom then it seems to be that it is conceptualized as being subject to manipulation as if it were a physical object. If this is true it means that it is conceptualized as a physical manipulable object. All examples where freedom or liberty is used with the verbs give, take or is simply related to as being manipulated as a physical object places them in this category. The label Manipulable_Object is misspelled and is supposed to be referred to as a manipulable object.

11.3 Struggle

¹The label Manipulable_Object is misspelled in the coding, thus it is misspelled here. The label was intended to be called Manipulable_Object.
The struggle category is made up of examples where liberty and freedom are either attacked or defended. If it can be considered to be attacked, as in the following example, it falls into the Fight category. “… firing tenured teachers, some charged that this amounted to an assault on their intellectual freedom. ‘You'll never go broke overestimating how sensitive the tenure issue is to…’” (TIME magazine corpus) Respectively, if it can be considered as being defended it falls under the keep category. “movement to outlaw war should be assisted so far as is consistent with safeguarding U.S. liberty.” (TIME magazine corpus) These examples were some of the clearer ones, however, some proved more difficult than others and seemed to be mixture of different source domains. “…silver will bear interest in British blood, sweat and tears on the battleground of freedom. For that which is morally wrong can never be politically right” (TIME magazine corpus) In this example it could be considered both as falling into the Place category, since a battleground is in fact a physical place, as well as the Struggle category. My reasoning behind my analysis in this case was as such: That it being a battleground tells us that it is a place of battle and the battle is for freedom. Thus freedom is a battle.

11.4 Ideal

Ideal proved the most bothersome category because one must first decide how to discern “ideal” as a conception as opposed to freedom or liberty as an ideal. I placed examples where liberty and freedom were conceptualized as being something to strive for or not yet fully realized or as something that is celebrated or loved. Looking at this example of liberty being used as a principle of a movement might help explain my reasoning. “…of the newspapers whose flaming editorials in days gone by had proclaimed their love of freedom; but they, like the universities, were silenced in a few short weeks…” An ideal is something that something that represents your idea of perfection and celebrating an abstract concept like freedom or liberty suggests that, if not considered an ideal, is at least highly appreciated.

11.5 Place

Whenever the lexemes are used with verbs that is used with traveling to a destination or is referred to a destination it is placed under the category place. Simply meaning if freedom or liberty is a destination or a place to rest then it is considered a place. “Frenchman and a Frenchman who gave his life that other Frenchmen might live in the liberty for which they fought.” Looking specifically at “live in” we see that the speaker refers either to a place to live such as a country or a container, but of the two the former seems much more plausible as human beings very rarely live in tin cans.

11.6 Value

Whenever value or ranking is placed on liberty or freedom, as in importance or ranking I placed it in this category of labels.

11.7 Misc

Some of the metaphors did not fit into the labels that were used in the Source Domain Course category, these consists either of those that were singular in use or too few to justify a new label.

12. Coding summary

This is a summary of my coding which shows the numerical values for each label.

3. Results

An MCA shows the relationship of different parameters fed into the program “R”, meaning it places those parameters that are closely related to each other close in proximity. The MCA results are exploratory and here we will look at the results found explaining first with freedom and then liberty.

3.1 Freedom, metaphor and time

Looking at figure 1 (p.10) we see the 20s and the 30s are associated with MANIPUTABLE_OBJECT this tells us that during that time freedom was mostly conceptualized as a manipulable object, as in something you can give or take, buy and sell. The 40s is associated with manipulable object but has shifted towards Ideal, this tells us that there has been a shift where freedom is more and more conceptualized as something that you strive for. The difference being that something that you strive for or need to work for is something that is unrealized, something you work for and achieve, whilst if conceptualized as a manipulable object it is something that you can give or take or even obtain through monetary offerings.

The 50s, 60s are both associated mostly with MANIPUTABLE_OBJECT but as you can see the 50s draws towards STRUGGLE whereas the 60s moves towards Place. What this tells us is that during the fifties freedom meant something that was attacked or defended, like for instance a castle.
under siege, in constant peril at being lost. The 60s connection with Place shows an introduction of the conception of freedom as a physical place to visit or travel to. With the 70s we see a close relationship to MISC meaning that many metaphors used during this time did not last. On the Y-axis we see a relationship with MANIPUTABLE_OBJECT and STRUGGLE, this does not mean that these were the most common of conceptions of the lexeme, however, it does show us that there was a gradual shift in meaning and not an abrupt change from the 60s.

On the other side of Figure 1 we find the 80s closest to Place but still having some associations with MANIPUTABLE_OBJECT and STRUGGLE. Clearly the conception of freedom of the 80s is of it as a physical place, but the connection to MANIPUTABLE_OBJECT and STRUGGLE shows us once again that it is a gradual change that is in progress. The placement of the 90s shows a connection to STRUGGLE telling us that once again that freedom is something that is being attacked or defended. There is also a connection to MANIPUTABLE_OBJECT and MISC telling us that though the main conception of freedom is as something attacked or defended, the thought has returned that freedom is an object to be given or taken or something you have. The 2000s has a connection both with IDEAL, meaning something you strive for and try to achieve and MANIPUTABLE_OBJECT; something you can give to someone or take away. This suggests a sudden change in conception and meaning from the 90s but perhaps given tragic events of this decade, it is not so strange.
3.2 Freedom, patient and time

Looking first at Figure 2 shows us that during the 20s, the most common patient is Society and Spec_Hum then the 30s is associated mostly with Country and Spec_Hum. Then we see that the forties is split between Country and Society, however, Society is more slightly more common. What this tells us is that during the 20s the most common patient is the entire world or groups that exist all across the globe and to some extent specified human beings. Then we have the 30s where the most common patient is a country but still with some connection to the 20s in its association with Spec_Hum. The 40s position shows a change from both previous decades in its association with Country and Society but lack thereof in regards to Spec_Hum. This tells us that the patient has changed from being specified humans to countries and the world.

Looking then at Figure 3 These results show that during the fifties is associated with Society and the placement on the X-axis tells us that it has a connection with Country as well. This tells us that the most common patient is the world or groups of people spread across the world but that there is a gradual shift to the 60s when there is a clear connection to Country, meaning that freedom was used mostly pertaining specified countries. The 70s placement on Figure 3 tells us that specified humans were the most common patient and that there has been a shift from the 60s close connection with countries being the patient to a more widespread use.
Looking at Figure 4 and the final decades we see the 80s is associated with freedom affecting the whole world and then there is a shift during the 90s toward the affected party being a country, however, the closest label is still Society meaning that like the 80s the most common patient is the entire world. The 2000s position shows a movement from the patient of freedom being a country and the world toward it being specified humans or groups.
3.3 Freedom, agentivity and time

This plot is very messy but the grouping down to the left is 50s, 60s and 40s these, and the 2000s, are placed well away from Agent, showing us that freedom being an agent is not associated with these decades. The second grouping we see, just to the right and down of Non_Agent are the 20s, 30s, 70s and the 80s, this tells us that freedom as an agent is not common at all in these decades. The 90s is the decade with the strongest association with Agent but still it is more associated with Non_Agent meaning that though freedom as an agent is more prevalent in the 90s than any other decade it is still more associated with freedom not being an agent.
3.3 Freedom, argument and time

Looking at Figure 5 we see three distinct groupings, we have the fifties, sixties, seventies and the two thousands showing no association of freedom as a subject. Then we have the forties, twenties and eighties showing some association of freedom as a subject. Finally we have the thirties and the nineties showing the most cases of freedom as a subject.
3.4 Liberty, metaphor and Time

This plot is quite messy and so it will be broken up into plots dealing with metaphor on a thirty-year basis to clarify.
In Figure 8, we find the 20s highly associated with liberty as a manipulable object and something you attack or defend and this does not change for some time as the position of the 30s shows us. The 30s is, however, slightly more associated with liberty as a something you attack and defend. The proximity of the 30s with IDEAL tells us; in this case, that the thought of liberty as something you strive for is out of the three decades associated mostly with the 30s, looking at Figure 7 confirms this. Looking at the 40s it is associated with STRUGGLE meaning that the most common metaphor is that of liberty being something you attack or defend. It is also associated with IDEAL and PLACE although not as heavily as it is with STRUGGLE, meaning that other common metaphors were of liberty as something you strive for and a physical place.

As we see the 50s is highly associated, with STRUGGLE and IDEAL meaning that the 50s is very similar to the 40s with liberty considered something you strive for or attack and defend. The 60s shows association to IDEAL, MISC but since MISC is a compellation of singular or very uncommon metaphors only IDEAL is very important for identifying the conception of freedom during the 60s. What the association with MISC tells us is that during the 60s it was common use freedom in unusual ways, separating the 60s not as clear when it comes to metaphor usage. Comparing Figure 7 and Figure 9 we see the 70s association with STRUGGLE and MANIPUTABLE_OBJECT that tells us that there has been a rather drastic change from the way freedom was conceptualized in the 60s back to something you attack or defend or a manipulable object.

Looking at first at Figure 10 and beginning with the 80s there is a clear association with MANIPUTABLE_OBJECT meaning that during the 80s the conception of liberty was of it as a manipulable object. The 90s is associated chiefly with IDEAL but there is a connection to the 80s in its slight association with MANIPUTABLE_OBJECT and with the 2000s through its association with STRUGGLE. The 2000s has a clear connection to the metaphor STRUGGLE thus we see the change from the 80s metaphor of a manipulable object, to the 90s where it was considered a manipulable object and finally the 2000s where it is seen as something you attack or defend.

3.5 Liberty, patient and time

Figure 11 shows us the difference in patient over time but it will be broken up into thirty-year periods to clarify each result
Looking then at Figure 12 showing us first that the 20s and the 30s right on top of each other, both associated with Society meaning that a discussion of liberty the entity affected by liberty is the world or groups spread across the world. The 40s is more associated with specified humans or groups that are not spread across the world. There is a connection to Society though that is important to make note of when we look at the 50s.
In figure 13, the 50s is associated with Societ and as we saw in Figure 11, the 40s has some association with Societ suggesting a gradual change. This tells us that there was a change from the most common patient being specified humans to the most common patient being the world. The 60s is also associated with Societ but with some association with Country. This is not important in regards to change over time since we see that the 70s is mostly associated with Spec_Hum and Societ. The difference between the 50s and 70s is that Societ is much more common in the 50s than in the 70s.

Figure 14 shows us the final three decades used in this article and it shows us all three decades has an association with Society, and in fact, this is the strongest association, which we can see by looking Figure 11. This means that in all three decades the world or groups of people spread around the world is the most common patient.
3.6 Liberty, agentivity and time

Figure 15 – Liberty, agentivity and the 20s, 30s and the 40s

Figure 15 shows us that the 20s and the 30s are both associated with Non_Agent but has some association with Agent this tells us that agentivity in liberty is not common but it does occur during these decades. The 40s has no association with Agent at all and that tells us that the instances where agentivity does occur are not common at all.
Looking now at Figure 16 we see that the 50s is associated with Non_Agent as is the 60s and 70s, however, we see a steady decrease in the relativity between agentivity in liberty and the category Time as actual time progresses. This means that as time progresses from the 50s through to the 70s there is a decrease in agentivity in liberty.

Looking at Figure 17 the 80s through to the 90s, we see that the 80s and 90s share their association with Non_Agent and Agent. This shows us that during the 80s and 90s, the usage of liberty as an agent is not common but it does occur. The 2000s is not associated with Agent at all and this tell us that agentivity in liberty during the 2000s is not common at all.
3.7 Liberty, subject, object and time

![Graph showing relationships between Liberty, Subject, Object, and Time]

Figure 18 – Liberty, subject, object and the 20s, 30s, and the 40s

In Figure 18, the 20s and the 30s have the same relationship to Obj and Sub and this tells us that liberty as a subject was not common at all during these decades. The 40s are clearly heavily associated with Obj and that tells us that liberty as a subject is not at all common during the 40s.

Looking then at Figure 19 we see that the 50s and is associated with Obj but has some relation with Sub showing that although liberty as a subject is not common there is a slight increase in the lexeme used as a subject. Looking then at the 60s and its association with Sub we see a further increase of liberty as a subject before it goes back in the 70s to mostly being an object as is seen in its association with Obj.

Figure 20 shows the 80s is associated to Obj but also that there is some connection to Sub as it is for the 90s this tells us that during these decades there was an increase in the usage of liberty as a subject from the 70s. The 2000s is only associated with Obj and that tells us that during the 2000s the use of liberty as a subject has declined to being almost non-existent.
3.8 Logistic Regression

My thesis is that there has been a change in the usage and meaning of the lexemes freedom and time in TIME magazine during the twentieth century. The MCA plots I illustrated show that there has been a change in the use of metaphor, agentivity and a difference in the usage of the lexemes as a subject and object for both lexemes. Looking at a logistic regression that uses a model of the analysis to predict the lexeme that is used without using the examples showed these results.

The probability value shown in the rightmost column is the percentage of which the analysis failed to predict the lexeme using the label to the left. Take `source_domain_coarseIDEAL` for instance, it as a probability value of 0.507842, this means that out of a hundred times I would get a different result for that label 5 percent of the times the logistic regression tested my analysis model. The stars to the right of the probability value for each label tells me which of the labels are important to the discerning of lexemes in the model, those without stars are considered to be chance. The P value at the bottom of the logistic regression is the probability value of the model as a whole; zero tells us that the model as a whole is sound. The C value at the bottom tells us, in percentage, how many times the model predicted the lexeme used. To know it is not chance it needs to predict correctly 80% of its attempts, however, it only predicted correctly 76% of the attempts, which does not speak well for the model as a whole. In contrast to this is the R2 value which is a more precise way of measuring the accuracy of the model, the standard to prove the model to be sound is a result of 0.3 and as the model scores 0.319 it shows that the model is proven sound in discerning between the lexemes.

The second value important to the analysis is Estimate Std. This shows us what importance the related label has for distinguishing between the two lexemes on a scale. For it to be considered important, it needs to be plus or minus four. The ones closest to this are `ArgumentSub` and `AGENTIVITYNon_Agent` each with an estimate of roughly 2.7, which might not be perfect but they are in comparison with the other labels the most important for distinguishing between the two lexemes.

Looking at variation across time for both lexemes combined shows significant difference in one category; namely, `ExpFine` shows that its probability value is extraordinarily low making it highly significant in difference in usage across time.

Freedom and Liberty in TIME magazine
We will not look any further than this because this is only relevant for the concept but it is interesting nonetheless. Following we will look at the two lexemes separately.

Looking at this we see the stars marking out important labels, which show that ExpFINE is the most important in looking at difference across time for both lexemes. AGENTIVITY is very important for liberty over time and so is Syntax_Lexeme_FINE. In my exploratory analysis of the MCA plots I looked at Metaphor, Agentivity, Argument and Exp_FINE and with this proving that Exp_Fine and Agentivity are significant labels when looking at difference across time we can assume that the MCA plots displaying these labels show the difference in usage in time.

4. Conclusion

I have tried to prove that there has been a change in usage and meaning in the lexemes freedom and liberty. Looking at the exploratory MCA results, we see a clear change in usage for both freedom and liberty. The results from the logistic regression and the Anova analysis seems to corroborate this, with the Anova results lending strength to the importance of the plots of Exp_FINE and Agentivity.

The predictability value of the model proves it scientifically valid in the regards of establishing difference between the lexemes and a difference in usage over time. However, it does not prove that the model is valid in showing that difference. By looking at the result from the logistic regression, it is clear that a multifactorial quantitative research method works very well when it comes to proving that there has been a change in usage over time.

The implication of the MCA results is that there has been a change in usage and meaning. Since this article only used the TIME corpus, the change that we see in the MCA and logistic regression is limited to within that magazine. Using multiple corpuses would generate a result more true to the general usage of the lexemes in the U.S. The method could also be used to research the connection between metaphors and patient. This would tell us if freedom and liberty is the same for the United States of America or any other country.

The world has changed during the twentieth century and so have the people living in the world and with us changes our culture, our views of the world and our language.

Citing the delicacy of ongoing efforts to secure eventual liberty for the hostages, Brzezinski refuses to respond point by point to Sullivan's bill led the parade or refused to march. It is the cradle not only of liberty but of imagination: John Harvard conceived of a college; Emerson and Thoreau extolled as the most efficient economic system or as the philosophy most compatible with political liberty. But even capitalism's most ardent supporters have had trouble answering charges that it Liberty has never come from any Government. Liberty comes from the limitation of the power of Government, whose very nature is force through a writ of habeas corpus on the theory that it had been deprived of liberty without having done anything wrong. Before Carol was released last week on other grounds taken for granted in the absence of the military strength that ensures a nation's liberty. By the time the convention ended, Leader Helmut Kohl, 51, had produced a piercing and extremely influential series of books on the subtlest problems of individual liberty and social coercion. In analyzing the relationship between power and truth, he is staffs, between individuals. Yet there is almost always reaffirmation of the principle of liberty, the glue of the free world. What had begun as Poland's year of liberty ended dramatically in violence, bloodshed and repression. The beleaguered government of General Wojciech Amendment rights do not necessarily take priority over the individual's right to life, liberty, privacy and the pursuit of happiness. mostly graffiti. Hair is lavish in dispraise of all things American, except presumably liberty. The play itself borders on license by presenting a scene in which half a wants to give billions of dollars to Central America, it says, to support liberty and political pluralism. Yet democracy in Central America is a patchy business at best he found himself turning his campaign talk into a rather passionate tutorial on religion and liberty. "The founding fathers spelled it out in great detail, " he said ranks, have given such vibrant life to the constitutional guarantees of equality and individual liberty that American society stands transformed. Thus the debt is not just a financial but a political problem. To enjoy liberty, you must have a minimal level of subsistence. finished too. American politics is no longer about bearing any burden in defense of liberty. American politics is about the Clean Air Act. # This is not to is constitutional. The Fifth and 14th amendments only prevent the denial of life and liberty without due process of law. When Chief Justice Earl Warren was on this court some liberals, including the late Justice Hugo Black) insist privacy is an invented liberty without constitutional foundation. Let Souter second Black, if that be his position, and have more time with his family. What generation in history has enjoyed such liberty to write the rules as it goes along? Over the past 30 years, out in the name of the Irish Republican Army, the six Irishmen won their liberty after Britain's Court of Appeal at last concurred with their contention that the case right down to his repudiation of America. No one ever embraced life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness more lustily. An Emersonian boom was his, and daring experiment in democracy that in turn became a symbol and a haven of individual liberty for people throughout the world. But the revolution that began with his voyages was to have joined the pantheon of inalienable human entitlements, right there alongside life, liberty and the pursuit of good TV reception. How else to explain the fuss made but that can not control our decision. Our obligation is to define the liberty of all, not to mandate our own moral code. " Despite this affirmation lower the tone of American campaigns. The freedom to ignore politics is a democratic liberty almost as precious as the freedom to participate. And for many intelligent, well-informed sweeps away argument. Jefferson was the giver of America's creed of life and liberty, but he was tormented and ineffective at facing the nation's blood curse of power, and some of his sentences issued to Israeli forces in the West Bank allow them greater liberty to open fire on known guerrillas belonging to Hamas and its spin-off, the Islamic became apparent that there was nothing simple, or certain, about Suu Kyi's liberty. It was tempting to imagine a Burmese equivalent of the release of Nelson Mandela their kids' daily intake of vitamins with Prozac to ensure their success. The liberty to obey the caprices of our emotions, no matter how politically incorrect, should fear. There is in these new media a foreshadowing of the intellectual and economic liberty that might undo all the authoritarian powers on earth. Young Jessica had absolutely no freedom of choice regarding her right to life, liberty or the pursuit of a normal education. Most of her teachings came from her mind and our tradition of freedom: we accept a bunker culture in which liberty loses to suffocating security measures. We dishonor the memory of our dead by giving from mutual admiration to mutual acrimony. Both countries claim to embody universal ideals of liberty and human rights, making them kindred souls in terms of shared values but sharp to get after the Civil War to help them support themselves and make their new liberty real. For most of them, of course, the promise never materialized, But some are, slowly, expressing aspirations for greater guarantees of personal liberty, for laws they can understand and trust. # The country is a mosaic is tiresome to continue seeing the media refer to Cuban Americans who feel passionately about liberty and freedom as anti-Castro zealots. Are Cuban Americans using Elian as a political pawn are still attracted to Windsor. These days, though, they come not for liberty or libations but to buy toilets. so judged today.
