Corpus-driven Cognitive Linguistics

1. Introduction

The close relationship between culture and language has been captivating humans since ancient times and various schools of thought have offered different approaches. Cognitive Linguistics holds the view that language is a socially constructed phenomenon. Members of a given speech community experience the world in more or less similar way as they speak one language. By means of commonly shared views and ways of speaking comprehension becomes possible. That in turn serves to strengthen cultural ties and develop a sense of identity. By looking at the ways speakers of English communicate this essay will capture their realities, truths and shared assumptions in connection with the conceptualization of alienation. Using a quantitative corpus driven method it aims to operationalize that broad concept by examination of the alien related noun constructions derived from the authentic samples of language.

This paper consists of five sections. In the following part a brief description of the method is presented, as well as, the holistic approach to language is discussed. Section three contains practical aspects of the research itself while section four is entirely concerned with presenting the results of the findings. Section five is closed with general conclusions.

2. Method

The method employed in this research is called a usage-based model that enables the examination of habitual patterns of language constructions at different levels simultaneously. The collected data are surveyed and quantified in order to make generalisations and assumptions about the way language has been operationalized.

2.1. The Corpus

The most important principle concerning the foundation of the corpus was to achieve a broad approach by collecting data from four different sources representing different groups of people. The examples were to represent both press and blogs published on the Internet. No specific time was considered. The British National Corpus and Time Magazine, as well as, on-line personal diaries written by American and British commentators were taken into account. Additionally, the corpus is composed of a number of text fragments derived from different web pages. Within British English the examples were taken from The BBC, Daily Mirror, Business, Observer and The Sun. All text fragments were collected by the occurrences of the keywords foreigner/immigrant in the context. As far as American English was concerned the same procedure was followed using the following home pages; The New Yorker, The CNN, Newsweek and the Washington Post.

The final corpus contained 400 sentences with the keywords in context. In the process of collecting data direct from the Internet programs such as BBEdit and Microsoft Word were used. Finally, a separate Microsoft Excel document was employed in order to conduct a manual analysis by means of 34 carefully chosen variables. When this phase of inquiry was completed two statistical tools were applied using the program R for further exploration of semantic and sociolinguistics variations; the former Multiple Correspondence Analysis (MCA) for plotting favoured reappearing patterns of meaning and usage in order to illustrate them in a multidimensional space; the latter Logistic Regression analysis (LogReg) for validation of the results (Glynn 2010).

2.1 Cognitive Linguistics: The nature of language

The case study presented here acknowledges the value of approaching language holistically. The holistic approach contemplates language as one unity since lexis and syntax are not separate but connected with each other. Cognitive linguistics supports the view that knowledge of the world is purely acquired through senses. Human beings tend to view their reality by referring to knowledge of past similar experiences and thoughts. Hence word-meaning is enriched with speaker's background and interpretation of the world he or she interacts with, so-called "encyclopaedic semantics" (Fillmore 1985). Furthermore, mother tongue plays a crucial role in a process of understanding how a given community views the world around them (Wierzbicka 1998). Categorisation for cultural concepts the Idealised Cognitive Models (ICM) (Lakoff 1987) suggests that the world is structured linguistically. Language is seen as a mental and well-organized storage of basic categories or concepts that is collectively shared by members of the same linguistic group. It is reasonable, therefore, to assume that the focal sense of a given term is the realization of cultural models as words are used in a reference to related concepts in mind. Consequently, word-meanings are established by habitual usage, what is called entrenchment (Geeraerts 2010 Glynn 2010).

Alternatively, fundamental concepts are seen as an innate predisposition of human mind. Concepts might be triggered by sensory experiences, but not solely acquired through them (Chomsky 1957).

3. Analysis

The following coding schema was employed to examine different patterns of linguistic forms and meanings used by native speakers of English when referring to new arrivals. Both lexemes of interest, that is foreigner and immigrant, are frequent substantives that can be used in reference to someone who experiences a state of social isolation from a group to which he or she would like to belong to, in other words an alien. Although the choice of one word above the other in a given context might lead to confusion or misunderstanding. From grammatical point of view, determiners and adjectives often modify substantives. As a consequence, these two variables were among the first ones added into the schema. The distinction between the singular and plural forms, as well as, referent gender and type, furthermore the choice of main lexical verbs and underlying themes of each example were also taken into consideration. As the coding began more variables were added into the schema in order to operationalize the concept of alienation in depth. What follows next is an evaluation of all variables that were used in the coding schema together with their features.

Cross-Cultural study in Noun Constructions

3.1. Dialect

As the main aim of this study was to operationalize the concept of alienation captured in the background of two cultures a distinction between the American and British varieties of English was made.

3.2. Lexeme

The second column in the coding schema consists of 200 examples of lexemes foreigner and 200 of immigrant.

3.3 Register

Two different communication sources available on the Internet were chosen. On one hand, the formal prose is represented by press (media); on the other hand, personal diaries written mostly by young people represent more casual style of writing.

3.4 Style- Lexeme

The column combines the following variables Register and Lexeme under one term. Observations with foreigner and immigrant derived from press were put into the formal category: F_Formal and I_Formal and those taken from blogs were classified as the informal category which features were coded in the following fashion F_InFormal and I_InFormal.

Katarina Helgeman

3.5. Dictionary

The Dictionary variable proposes the following references for lexemes in question: according to a lexicon a foreigner ascribes someone who is descended from a foreign country, that is, a person of another nation “an alien”, not a citizen of the country in which they live or work (Cambridge Dictionary 2002). Two following variations of that meaning were distinguished in the data;

a) I have traveled so often in other countries and am so accustomed to other landscapes; I sometimes felt on my trip that I was seeing America, coast to coast, with the eyes of a foreigner, feeling overwhelmed, humbled and grateful.

(foreigner = stranger)

b) I feel like a foreigner. And it's not a good feeling when you know, intellectually, you're an American. But when you're not treated like one, then it kind of makes you schizophrenic. It makes you feel crazy

(foreigner = stranger)

Immigrant, on the other hand, refers to “a settler”, that is, “a person who has come to live permanently in a country that is not their own” (Oxford Advanced Learner's Dictionary 2006). The usage of this relatively neutral term occurred extremely rare in the corpus. Lexeme immigrant is often modified by either attributive adjectives or quantifying pronouns. As a consequence of such usage completely new concepts have emerged. In very few cases, a sense like “migrant” was used instead of “alien” denoting person's mobility (the geographical movement of people) especially in order to find employment (Cambridge Dictionary 2002).

3.6 Class Collocation

Noun phrases with premodifiers are commonly used in English in order to enlarge the basic meaning of the noun. The Word Class Collocation variable examines the structures used as modification of foreigner and immigrant. As a result, four different structural types of premodification were surveyed: quantifying pronouns, nouns, numerals and attributive adjective. Additionally, attributive adjective are divided into two semantic sub-groups; the first one highlights a positive quality Adj_Plus and the second one ascribes a negative quality Adj_Minus. A noun phrase with no modifier at all was marked as Coll.NA (not applicable).

3.7 Collocation

As mentioned above collocations are considered as a formal category (syntax) but above their simply linguistic role, the collocations of foreigner/immigrant transform the meaning of the whole noun phrase. The additional information about the most salient ideas associated with foreigner and immigrant can be decoded here. The Collocation variable regarded all function words preceding foreigner/immigrant as one unit. Additionally, the singular (sg) and plural (pl) form of these nouns was also included here. All in all, three different groups of collocations were specified:

- Zero collocation means that lexemes foreigner/immigrant are used with no modifier at all.

Immigrants move to places where workers are needed: in Liverpool, for instance, where jobs are scarce and are about to get scarcer, you are likely to find Liverpoolians working in Costa and Pret and cleaning hotel rooms.
(immigrants (plural) = I_pl)

- Quantifier Collocation highlights some kind of number or group modifier preceding foreigner/immigrant;

According to the Daily Telegraph, over 2 million foreigners are now working in the UK, which is a 75% increase in workers from abroad in the last six years.
(2 million foreigners (plural) = Q_F_pl)

Katarina Helgeman

- Type Collocations refers to all attributive adjectives that were used together with foreigner/immigrant;

I have known many people that have bought real estate in foreign countries. It's just that now that the US dollar is so low and our economy has been so devastated by the Republicans, that the rich Foreigners come here now to buy our cheap real estate. And even that is dropping in value more & more every day

(the rich foreigners (plural) = T_F_pl)

As mentioned above collocations in this column were approached as a whole. What follows next, is a short description of the individual collocates, that is, determiners and attributive adjectives preceding foreigner/immigrant.

3.7.1 Determiner

To begin with, the Determiner variable represents the functional category that includes words from different word classes. Determiner always precedes the head of the noun phrase in this case, foreigner/immigrant, as well as its premodifiers. The first column Determiner Fine consisted of the great number of words taken directly from the dataset. The next step involved duplication of the column in order to granulate all items into two broader levels of category, that is, Determiner Medium and Determiner Coarse. These two additional levels of the Determiner variable can be viewed in the coding schema.

3.7.2 Article

The Article variable focuses only on articles preceding foreigner/immigrant. Noun phrases with the indefinite article were coded in the following fashion Indef_A. These with the definite article were marked as Def_A. Phrases with no article at all were labelled as Art.NA

Cross-Cultural study in Noun Constructions

3.7.3 Adjective 1

The Adjective 1 variable refers to the first adjective that follows directly after the Determiner variable in the noun phrase. Attributive Adjectives are the most common type of premodification of foreigner/immigrant in the dataset. The first column Adjective 1 Fine consists of a large number of different lexical forms. In order to make the analysis more legible division into two wider semantic categories Medium and Coarse (the broadest) was applied here, as well.

3.7.4 Adjective 2

Adjective 2 concerns the second adjective in the noun phrase. However, as the analysis proceeded, it was noticed that occurrences of the second adjective preceding foreigner/immigrant were relatively rare. These empty spaces indicating the lack of adjective were labelled as Adj.2NA. The procedure of duplicating and grouping adjectives into two boarder semantic categories was also employed here.

3.8 Axiology

The Axiology variable looks on the powerful effects of the way the speakers of English communicate with each other in the everyday world. This semantic feature determines whether the lexemes foreigner/immigrant occur in a positive (Pos) or negative (Neg) context.

3.9 Verb

Katarina Helgeman

The Verb variable consists of the main lexical verb used in the neighbourhood of lexemes foreigner/immigrant. These verbs express the actions, processes and states performed by the referent. The first Verb column consisted of a wide variety of verbs taken directly from the data. Grouping items into Medium and Coarse levels of verb category led to the following semantic sub-categories:

Verb Medium		Verb Coarse
• conduct	196	action verb
• hold	65	control verb
• comprise	62	static verb
• feel	61	emotive verb
• offer	16	event verb

3.11 Usage

The Usage Variable tackles the literal and figurative meanings of words and expressions observed during the analysis of the lexemes foreigner/immigrant. Two alternatives were at disposal, Figure for the figurative meaning and NonFigure for the precise one. Analysing the meaning at a deeper level can reveal important findings about the general stance towards all social minorities.

3.12 Referent Number

Contrast between the singular and plural forms of foreigner/immigrant was originally distinguished here.

3.13 Referent Type

The distinction between generic and specific reference is surveyed here. If a referent was unique or well known, that is, if it was generally intelligible from the situation what was meant, the Referent Type was labelled as specific (Specific_R). Generic reference, on the other hand, was used in reference to the whole class, that is, all foreign-born people in order to make generalizations. These sentences were marked as Generic_R.

Cross-Cultural study in Noun Constructions

3.14 Referent Gender

In this column referent's gender was taken into consideration. Three alternatives were at disposal "male", "female" or "RG.NA" (no applicable). However, at the early stage of the analysis, it was discovered that this variable was of less significance to the results of analysis.

3.15 Polarity

The polarity variable makes distinction between affirmative and negative forms. In general, grammatical polarity is marked by the presence or absence of the adverbial "not" in the observation. The majority of the sentences occurred in the affirmative form.

3.16 Humour

The Humour variable looks on whether or not some kind of humorous usage or sarcasm is present in the sentence when addressing foreigner/immigrant.

3.17 Theme

The Theme variable refers to the general matter of discussion, most of the time themes cover immigration issues together with its serious political consequences e.g. unemployment, crime, finances, education etc. However, interpretation of any discourse is usually a problematic process therefore the decision was made to duplicate the column Theme and group the features together in order to make generalisations. The final number of themes consisted of the following labels:

Katarina Helgeman

- social status 151
- threat 83
- defence 70
- unity 45
- leisure 29
- trade 22

The number on the right represents occurrences for each theme in the data. “Social Status”, that is, the social position of all ethnic groups was the main theme of discussion in the corpus. What follows next is theme “threat” caused mainly by financial worries caused by for instance competence on the labour market. The third one “defence” calls for political actions in order to limit the influx of new arrivals into the country in question. Additionally, two broad levels of Theme Coarse category were grouped as Theme 1 and Theme 2. The former consists of three items; Migration, Unity and Trade. The latter is grouped into Migration and NonMigration. A detailed list of all themes can be found in the coding schema.

4. Results

Seven plots modelled by Multiple Correspondence Analysis (MCA) accompany each sub - section. Additionally, three models of these findings were confirmed statistically by Logistic Regression (LogReg).

4.1 Axiology versus Lexeme

Lexemes foreigner and immigrant are related terms that are often used in reference to “non natives”. In a popular usage, both of them refer to a person who comes from a foreign country. Consequently, they appear in a narrow number of contexts. However, meanings and manipulations of the concept vary as different people might refer to dissimilar definitions. Speaker's general associations with these lexemes are conveyed by Axiology.

Figure 1 shows the results of correspondence analysis of the lexemes foreigner/immigrant and Axiology. This technique captures semantic variation by placing distinctly correlated items close to each other and contrast items at a distance (Glynn 2010). The plot is divided into two fields; the Pos (Positive) feature is on the left part of the plot and the Neg (Negative) on the right. Consequently, MCA places both lexemes in the middle of the plot tight to the Negative feature. Such a distribution might indicate that both lexemes occur most frequently in a negative context in this particular dataset, for instance;

- (1) a. It is a fact that immigrants cause a significantly disproportionate amount of crime per head of population. A report I read the other day stated that one is arrested every four hours in Britain.
(immigrant + Negative)

Katarina Helgeman

b. It's always the foreigners causing all the trouble! Taking our jobs, wives, cars and the better animals away from us who pay taxes. And on top of that, they speak strangely with cloven tongues and refuse to think and be like us.

(foreigner + Negative)

However, foreigner is set on the left part of the plot, closer to the Positive feature. This position might indicate, when compared with immigrant, that the lexeme is more often used in a positive context. However, in order to validate this observation, more detailed analysis need to be conducted.

The attitudes towards these two lexemes and towards different concepts they might generate will be further examined in the following plots by a closer examination of how these respective lexemes are operationalized and in what situations speakers of English prefer one word above the other.

4.2. Premodification and Register

The choice of a term to be used in combination with foreigner and immigrant might be seen as an important pointer of speaker's views and opinions associated with these two lexemes. In the following plot foreigner and immigrant have been analysed together with the Class Collocation variable in order to discover ways in which both lexemes are frequently paired with. Furthermore, the survey examines whether there are large differences across registers in the use of the types of modification. Figure 2 captures the variation in noun modification as the plot is divided into two visible fields; the upper area is classified as Formal Style (Press) and the lower field belongs to Informal Style (Blog).

The Informal Style – cluster (coded as F_InFormal and I_InFormal) formed on the bottom of the plot includes two distinct modification patterns, that is, Pronoun and Attributive Adjective. The Formal Style – cluster, however on a wider scale, includes Noun and Numeral. The examples of the nounal observations with non-modification at all are marked as Coll.NA. This usage is placed exactly in between Formal and Informal Style on the left part of the plot together with lexeme foreigner (F_Formal F_InFormal) indicating that this particular usage is common to both registers.

Since foreigner and immigrant are falling exactly in between Pronoun this type of modification is the typical case in a casual conversation (blog). The following text sample illustrates these patterns;

- (2) a. The architecture is fascinating and varied. On the downside london is full of foreigners and damned tourists, which i don't have a problem with, except i mean FULL of them theres so many that i wonder if theres anyone from england in there.
(Pronoun + foreigner = blog)
- b...Yes, we have got quite a few immigrants coming in.
(Pronoun + immigrant = blog)

Katarina Helgeman

Furthermore, the Informal-Style-cluster links both lexemes together with Attributive Adjective. Adjectives used as premodifiers come from many different semantic classes. However, in this corpus, they cover two basic concepts, a positive quality stands for Adj_Plus and a negative character is understood by Adj_Minus. Consequently, MCA shows that Adj_Plus is placed in the neighbourhood of foreigner. Immigrant, on the other hand, occurs often together with Adj_Minus. Two examples illustrate these modification patterns;

c. ...staff party on wednesday, update shall definitely follow as there are hot foreigners there and chances look good...

(Adj_Plus hot + foreigners = blog)

d. i've got two national insurance numbers! why doesn't anything ever just go smoothly? maybe i should just sell the spare to an illegal immigrant. that would at least solve my present financial worries...

(Adj_Minus illegal + immigrant = blog)

Such a distinct distribution is not surprising as immigrant is mostly used with the modifier “illegal” which is highly associated with negativity. The term immigrant is widely understood to be “a settler”, in other words, a permanent legal resident. By contrast, illegal immigrant creates a new concept as it refers to someone who has violated the laws in establishing a valid residence permit in a given country and therefore might be categorised as a “criminal”. Consequently, immigrant becomes illegal alien and appears in a very narrow number of contexts. Such a categorisation might simply lead to abuse and negative associations people have with that lexeme (Baker Gabrielatos 2008).

The Formal Style-cluster collects Noun, Numeral and as pointed earlier, non - modification Coll.NA. Nouns and numerals are frequently used as space - saving devices especially in the formal language. However, looking at the plot, one can notice that Numeral is positioned in the top right part of the plot. Such a broad spatial distance to immigrant might indicate that this type of modifier occurs sporadically in this corpus. However, it is worth remembering that the dataset covers only 200 examples of immigrant observations, which is a relatively small number. These two patterns are presented below in the following observations;

e. BRITAIN was bracing itself for a fresh wave of immigrants last night as around 1,000 North African refugees set up camps near the Eurostar station in Paris.

(Noun wave of+ immigrants = Press Neg (threat))

f. More than 150 illegal immigrants are trying to sneak into the UK through the Channel Tunnel. Bosses say it's now time for urgent crackdown by the British and French Governments.

(Numeral 150+ immigrant = Press Neg (defence))

It is surprising that MCA places immigrant closer to Noun and Numeral than foreigner. In fact, judging by the position of foreigner, it often stands on its own. Such constructors are not typical of formal prose, where noun constructions are usually used together with some kind of modification (Biber Conrad Leech 2008). However, such a peculiar usage might contribute to the fact that foreigner occurs more frequently in favourable contexts than immigrant does. Looking back at the above examples with Numeral and Noun as premodifiers, it is evident that such descriptors are powerful instruments influencing the whole sentences negatively.

4.3. Premodification versus the singular and plural form

The following three variables Lexeme, Premodification and Referent Number were granulated together and named as Collocation in order to improve legibility upon the plot. As a consequence, Figure 3 shows relationships between Collocation and Axiology. The plot builds two distinct clusters, which indicates that semantic differences have been successfully captured. On the left, the majority of foreigner constructions are gathered on the outside of the variable Pos (Positive) confirming once again that foreigner is the most frequent lexeme associated with a positive context. The constructions of immigrant form a compact group on the other side of the Neg (Negative) feature. Such a distinct distribution in Axiology verifies the observation marked in Figure 2, namely, premodification of immigrant is more likely to create new senses that are associated with negativity.

Furthermore, the plot captures another interesting observation; both lexemes standing alone (without a modifier) used in the plural form, F_pl and I_pl, are found to be on the left part of the plot, close to the Positive feature. In other words, both of them are repeatedly used in a positive fashion. This might be explained by the findings detected in Figure 2, that is, all kinds of premodification might influence or change the neutral meaning of the keywords. Looking at the position of the construction of foreigner (T_F_pl) used in the plural form and modified by Attributive Adjective on the bottom of the plot this statement might be confirmed. Speaker's choice of the particular negative adjectives such as "bloody", "stupid" or "unauthorized" etc. add negative meanings to all terms. This indicates that the basic concept of foreigner has been transformed into a new category highly associated with negativity. However, once again, such a disposition in the plot might indicate that this usage had fewer occurrences in the corpus.

Cross-Cultural study in Noun Constructions

(3) a. I asked the coach driver what was going on. Did we need a passport to visit Manchester? He replied: It's because there are so many immigrants nowadays. I think this was my cue. I was meant to reply: "Yeah! Bloody foreigners! Round the bastards up and ship 'em back home!" But I didn't say that (T_F_pl bloody + foreigners = Neg)

b. The PM today will talk about immigration and what his plans are to stop those nasty foreigners coming over here stealing all our jobs and women and making it difficult for a good British boy to earn a wage and find a lady.

(T_F_pl nasty + foreigners = Neg)

Thus far, according to this research, the attitudes towards the majority of lexemes used without a modifier tend to lean towards positive associations and these terms that are modified might form a new concept that leans towards negativity. Despite these frequent indications of dynamics in meaning MCA shows in Figure 3 that lexeme immigrant used in a singular form and without any modifier I_sg is positioned in the top left part of the plot, falling into the Negative feature. Bearing in mind the previous findings illustrated by Figure 2 frequent usage of the term illegal immigrant by the members of a social group might trigger this one peculiar concept even when the “illegal” adjective is not used (Baker Gabrielatos 2008). In other words, the position of immigrant used in the singular form without a modifying adjective, that is, a neutral construction with many possible senses is converted into illegal alien reflecting highly negative associations often linked with “Social Problems”.

c. Well, an “immigrant” is technically someone who has already gained citizenship after arriving from another country. So, you can't really “deport” them. You could only strip them of their citizenship — but that would have to be for something REALLY bad, like if they were an old Nazi who ran a concentration camp or something.

(I_sg immigrant = generalization Neg)

d. interesting fact - ive started to tan at an unbelievable rate. starting to look like an immigrant - better get a hair cut

(I_sg immigrant = physical appearance Neg)

Katarina Helgeman

e. we are still being for more work because living can be expensive.
however, the cities are crawling with international folk being for work.
bastards. taking good jobs away from honest americans. haha. it's funny to think of myself as an immigrant
(I_sg immigrant = unemployment Neg)

The above observations indicate that negative associations and attitudes towards the immigrant construction (I_sg) are a visible distinction between “we” and “them” categorisation. Negative sense is attached to I_sg when this construction is used in reference to all immigrants. Consequently, all aliens are categorised in terms of “race” based on, as shown above, physical appearance, overdriven judgments or generalizations. However, once again, the position of I_sg in the far top of the plot is a sign of too rare occurrences of this peculiar usage in the corpus.

4.4. The Plural Form and Generic Reference

Figure 4 shows the results of the correspondence analysis of Article, Collocation, Referent Type and Axiology. The spatial distance between the factors for Generic (Generic_R) and Specific (Specific_R) Sense indicates that semantic variation in usage is noticeable. Furthermore, the plot has captured a variation in noun constructions (syntax) typically used by speakers of English.

Firstly, looking at the plot all plural forms are gathered on the left part of the plot together with Generic Sense. By contrast, on the right, all singular constructions have built a cluster around Specific Reference. However, the relationships between these two senses and Axiology are not marked so clearly. The Negative feature is placed above Generic Reference closest to the following constructions; T_F_pl, T_I_pl, Q_I_pl, I_sg and T_I_sg. Consequently, it might be stated that all of them are highly associated with negativity, for instance;

- (4) a. “We have hundreds of UK Border Agency officers based at our juxtaposed controls in France and Belgium, carrying out checks to stop illegal immigrants before they get to the UK. ”He added: “Since January this year we have stopped over 14,000 individual attempts to cross the channel illegally and have searched over 400,000 freight vehicles – checking that they are not harbouring illegal migrants.

(T_I_pl illegal immigrant (plural) with Generic Reference Neg)

- b. Three states issue driver's licenses to unauthorized foreigners, New Mexico, Utah and Washington.

(T_F_pl unauthorized foreigner (plural) with Generic Reference Neg)

- c. A leaked Home Office memo disclosed earlier this year that the points-based immigration system was allowing “large numbers” of illegal immigrants to slip into Britain on student visas.

(Q_I_pl large numbers of immigrant (plural) with Generic Reference Neg)

In general the odd position of the Positive feature depositing on the bottom of the plot indicates that the correlation between Axiology and Referent Type is not a simple case. In other words, MCA shows that observations used with Generic Reference are more likely to be associated with negative attitudes by placing the Negative feature on the left part of the plot. However, the distribution of such constructions as F_pl, I_pl and Q_F_pl on the inside of the Positive feature indicates that although they are used with Generic Sense both of them are associated with a positive context.

Katarina Helgeman

d....you can learn far more by meeting foreigners who have had drastically different life experiences than your own. For this reason, I have continued to enjoy work at Bertucci's.

(F_pl foreigner (plural) with Generic Reference = Pos)

e. Let us never forget that one of the reasons that Canada is such a vibrant nation, so diverse, so rich in the many cultures and races of the world, is that immigrants who come here - as was the case with the ancestors of many of us in this chamber - feel free and are free to practice their religion, follow their faith, live as they want to live.

(I_pl immigrant (plural) with Generic Reference = Pos)

f. Wealthy foreigners and entrepreneurs are to be offered a fast track to settle in Britain under new immigration rules unveiled today

(T_F_pl wealthy + foreigner (plural) with Generic Reference = Pos)

As far as syntax is concerned MCA reveals two syntactical constructions; Figure 4 indicates that noun constructions when used with Generic Reference take no definite article as a determiner NA.ART (Biber Conrad Leech 2009). The following observations found in the corpus confirm the above usage;

g. It has long been a truism of investing that foreigners tend to buy at the top of almost any market.

(zero article + foreigner (plural) = with Generic Reference)

h. My father says that immigrants should become Americans and speak Americanise.

(zero article + immigrant (plural) = with Generic Reference)

Similarly, it is possible to make Generic Reference even if modification precedes the head of the noun constructions. Consequently, the noun phrases are used without articles in the place of a determiner NA.ART (Biber Conrad Leech 2009);

Cross-Cultural study in Noun Constructions

- i. Illegal immigrants are intruding on our public education system. An estimated 28.6 billion dollars was spent on illegal alien's education in 2004.
 (zero article + premodifier + immigrant (plural) with Generic Reference = Negative)

In addition, the plot confirms that countable noun constructions used in a singular form typically have a determiner in English, coded here as ART. The following example is set in a context where the referent is unique. In other words, it is clear from the situation that there is one specific person to whom the speaker refers. Consequently, definite article is used together with that lexeme.

- j. I can't say I never thought about the tall, thin foreigner who I invited into my coffee shop so long ago.
 (the + premodifier + foreigner (singular) with Specific reference= Positive)

The plot reveals that Generic Reference might contribute to negative associations and judgments related to non-natives especially if lexemes foreigner or immigrant are modified and used in the plural form. As far as the positive attitude is concerned it is more difficult to interpret correlation between Axiology and Specific Referent. Generally speaking, referring to an individual rather than to a whole class often tends to be connected with a more open attitude.

In order to confirm that those patterns of meaning and use occur frequently in the authentic context Logistic Regression (LogReg), that is, a confirmatory statistical technique can be used. Through LogReg the data have been examined in order to predict a result based upon the other variables than those used by MCA in the previous plot. Figure 5 presents the products of Logistic Regression. As this technique can only test for binary variables, Referent Type, that is, Generic_R and Specific_R were modelled against contrasting variables in the coding schema. In the above table, the column on the left lists the features that were put into observation. The far right column reveals the P-value the closer to zero, the better indication of a solid variable. All statistically proven features are highlighted in bold. Minus in front of the variable indicates that this feature predicts for Generic Reference, non-minus, on the other hand, indicates that the feature predicts for the second variable, in this case, Specific Reference. At the bottom of the table the C –value stands for percentage. The high value of 0.889 is a firm figure denoting that the model would produce similar results if the survey were to be conducted again.

4.5. Themes

The plot in Figure 6 illustrates how different categories of noun constructions, that is, Collocation correlates with Axiology and Theme Coarse. An evident division into Axiology shows once again that the majority of immigrant constructions have gathered on the left part of the plot close to the Negative feature.

Furthermore, the negative factors are clearly grouped together with the following Themes: Defence and Threat located in the top left part of the plot, close to Q_I_pl. This position of immigrant indicates that the concept of a number (quantifier) preceding that lexeme affects the meaning of the unit in a negative way.

- (5) a. The millions upon millions of illegal immigrants in this country are stealing jobs, they are depressing wages in a whole host of industries and they are a huge factor in the erosion of the middle class.
 (Q_I_pl quantifier + immigrant (pl) = Threat Neg)

Theme Social Status is positioned down on the left part of the plot, grouping the following constructions modified by attributive adjectives; T_I_pl, T_F_pl, T_I_sg, as well as I_sg. Bearing in mind the results shown in Figure 2 such a distribution came as no surprise.

- b. Dinner was nice except for Dad making the comment that the people in front of us were illegal immigrants (they spoke Spanish).
 (T_I_pl illegal + immigrant (pl) = Social Status Neg)

Katarina Helgeman

c. TAXPAYERS are forking out millions of pounds a year in benefits to jobless foreigners who have returned to eastern Europe to live at our expense, the Daily Express can reveal.

(T_F_pl jobless + foreigner (pl) = Social Status Neg)

d. But he thinks that no one will ever believe him. He's just an immigrant and works in an off-licence, and he is dealing with Norman Lamont and very big company, so what can he do? "

(I_sg immigrant (sg) = Social Status Neg)

The positive attitude, on the other hand, is associated with the following themes: Unity, Leisure and Trade. In contrast to the clusters observed in connection with the Negative feature, only two constructions F_pl and T_F_pl are placed close to Trade, Unity and Leisure.

e. Volunteer groups say the presence of foreigners can calm things down, and encourage Israeli soldiers to moderate their behaviour

(F_pl foreigner (pl) = Unity Pos)

f. Instead, foreigners hold greater shares of their investment portfolios in the United States if they have less developed financial markets.

(F_pl foreigner (pl) = Trade Pos)

The other forms situated in the middle of the plot seem to lean towards the opposing contexts, for instance; I_pl and Q_F_pl tend towards such features as Defence and Threat related to the Negative variable. By contrast, Unity, Trade and Leisure are associated with positivity. Such a contrasting distribution between positive themes and highly negative ones might be explained by the fact that these particular constructions appear regularly in both of them.

g. Immigrants come to York Region from many different parts of the world, adding greatly to the cultural and social richness of our communities.

(I_pl immigrant (pl) = Unity Pos)

Cross-Cultural study in Noun Constructions

h. if immigrants cross over then they should be immediately returned to their homeland

(I_pl immigrant (pl) = Defence Neg)

In a similar manner, F_sg correlates with both concepts; on one side creating positive attachments when used in Trade or Leisure contexts, on the other hand negatively judged assumptions or harmful generalisations while discussing the matters concerning Social Status domains.

i. The foreigner who created most excitement was England's Nigel Mansell. The current Formula One champion is leading in the Indy Car season competition, finding the success in his first year that has eluded Michael Andrett...

(F_sg foreigner = Leisure Pos)

j. One in every five murders or manslaughters in England and Wales is committed by a foreigner, police figures revealed. In one area of London, the figure is one in three.

(F_sg foreigner = Social Status Neg)

MCA has illustrated important differences in how Collocation correlates with Axiology and Theme Coarse. Figure 7 presents the results of Logistic Regression used in order to confirm these findings. As a means to capture the authentic usage present in the corpus, Register, that is, Blog and Press were modelled against the other variables in the coding schema. All variables that were put into the analysis are listed in the first column. The negative figure in the second column denotes that the probability of the variable leans towards Blog. The positive figure indicates high probability for Press. Looking at the P-value, two strong predictors for Blog has been confirmed; Theme Coarse Social Status and Axiology Positive are found to be statistically significant. As far as Press is concerned, three variables proved to be of high importance, namely, Theme Coarse Trade, Collocation F_sg and Collocation T_I_sg. All the statistically proven features show moderate S.E. value (The Standard Estimate). Furthermore, the C- value of this model shows a figure of 0.701. The number is not a particularly strong indicator, however, the figure is a sign of that the analysis would produce similar results 50% more often than by chance.

Katarina Helgeman

4.6. Cultural differences

Although American and British culture and language are related to each other there are evident cultural differences between these two nations. Figure 8 captures how Theme Coarse correlates with the two dialects of American and British English. Looking at the results of MCA two contrasting groups have been formed; UK is set on the right part of the plot gathering the following themes Threat, Social Status and Defence. While on the left, the US feature is connected with Unity, Leisure and Trade. Such a distribution of features and a visible spatial distance between the US and the UK variables illustrates that differences between the American and the British corpora have been distinguished. The plot reveals that Threat is the most frequent “theme” discussed in the British corpus. By contrast, the US feature is placed close to Unity indicating that Unity is the most current one.

Multiple Correspondence Analysis

At this point, it is becoming visible that the American corpus is more often associated with positive attitudes than the British one. In other words, “themes” gathered together with the American variety of English frequently appear to represent more positive contexts. Figure 9 summarises the results of LogReg of the same analysis.

In order to confirm above hypothesis LogReg has modelled Dialect against Theme Coarse, Lexeme, Axiology, Referent Number and Usage. Bearing in mind that minus in the second column denotes high probability for British English, plus indicates high probability for American English. The P-value has highlighted the following variables; Referent Number Singular, Axiology Positive and Immigrant. All three are found to be statistically significant for American English. For British English the Migrant variable proves to be of high importance. The C- value of this model shows a figure of 0.683. The number is not an especially strong indicator, however, this model mirrors what MCA has found in Figure 8. Keeping in mind the findings from Figure 5, namely, Referent Number Singular is closely connected with Specific Reference that in turn influences Axiology in a positive manner, for instance;

(6) a. i met the swedish foreigner that goes to our school. he's a little bit hot.
he looks like rocky from rocky horror. i call him abba sometimes (foreigner (singular) = leisure US)

b. I offered my balls to a foreigner. Yes, you read that correctly. No, I don't actually have balls, but I did have some schweddy ones. Let me back track. I got on my 9pm flight headed for the east coast and immediately made friends with this adorable alien.
(foreigner (singular)= leisure US)

c. "Any time there's a merger, employees are right to worry about their jobs. Companies do about 'synergies' and that usually means laying off people," Page said. "But with a foreigner owning a U.S. firm, there is likely to be less overlap. In some ways, it's better to be taken over by a European company than a U.S. company."
(foreigner (singular) = trade US)

Cross-Cultural study in Noun Constructions

The examples from the American and British corpora quoted earlier illustrate that the concept of alienation varies as well as the use of its related noun constructions in both languages. The way people use their native tongues is linked to the previous experiences and associations that are commonly shared in a given culture. Clearly, mother tongue holds the potential of reflecting such differences (Wierzbicka 1998). The USA has been often described as a melting pot expressing more open attitude towards ethnic integration. In a similar vein, individualism, freedom, risk taking, as well as, competence are solely a few examples that are typical of American lifestyle. All of them correlate well with the above findings of MCA and LogReg analyses. The UK, on the other hand, has been commonly referred to as a conservative society with an unequal class system. The concept of alien tends to be understood in terms of a collective category mostly associated with language problems, unemployment or violence etc. Consequently, migrants might be classified as competitive or threatening communities to well established throughout centuries British ways of living (Skeggs 1997).

4.7. Dialect versus Dictionary

Figure 10 shows another view of the correspondence of Theme Coarse and Dialect. More importantly, the plot demonstrates how the Theme variable correlates with dissimilar dictionary definitions. By looking at the plot the US feature is still gathering parallel themes, Trade and Leisure, whereas the UK feature is in the neighbourhood of Threat. In the middle of the plot there is a compact cluster formation under the lexeme alien including the following factors; Defence, Social Status and Unity. The position of the cluster, that is, precisely in between the American and British varieties of English indicates that alien is commonly associated with both dialects when referring to those themes.

However, what is more interesting, Figure 10 provides the indication that the British corpus operates with different definitions of foreigner and immigrant in relation to the succeeding themes, Threat and Unity. Consequently, lexeme settler is positioned on the bottom of the plot closer to the UK feature. Furthermore, the distribution of migrant as well as stranger on the left part of the plot verifies that these keywords are mostly associated with the British corpus. Such a variation in categorisation clearly portrays the political events that are taking place in the United Kingdom (Baker Gabrielatos 2008). The context of the EU enlargement might trigger feelings of anxiety caused by the uncontrollable influx of new arrivals moving into the UK in order to find employment, for instance;

- (7) a. Britain can do little to reduce the flow of immigrants from the other 26 EU member states. In future it will be able to do even less if Bulgaria goes through with its plan to issue 500,000 passports to citizens of non-member countries; and if the new EU rule that guarantees immigrants the right to all welfare benefits accorded to native populations proves a magnet for immigrants.

(immigrant = migrant)

b. We cannot control immigrants from the EU - no country in the EU can. We HAVE to accept them, just as if you wanted to work in Germany or Spain they'd have to accept you. Whether that is right or not is a different matter, but at the moment there is nothing we can do about it.

(immigrant = migrant)

c. We got chinese workers who cant speak a word of english and polish workers who just talk in their tongue....You go in to shops cafe s etc they cant understand us or each other cos they different nationalities..You feel like a foreigner in your own country...

(foreigner = stranger)

Such a difference in categorisation gives an impression of a more in-depth treatment of immigration issues. Consequently, more thorough argumentation might contribute to the observations detected in Figure 9; in other words, the content of the British corpus might be interpreted as considerably unfavourable.

5. Conclusions

This corpus driven analysis about the conceptualization of alienation has explored the ways in which two lexemes foreigner and immigrant have been operationalized. The outcomes of the above analyses indicate, first of all, that there is a visible indication of how relatively neutral senses are regularly modified in everyday language. As a consequence, frequent and consistent use of modifiers expands or even changes the meanings of the lexemes glossed in a dictionary. In other words, the meaning proves to be dynamic.

Furthermore, foreigner and immigrant are equally associated with contrasting opinions. However, it was proved that lexeme foreigner appears in a broader spectrum of themes that is associated with more positive contexts such as holidays, love, trade etc. By contrast, immigrant is immediately connected with meaning production around social problems and therefore leans towards more negative attitudes.

Katarina Helgeman

Finally, the examination of regularities and variations in meaning, use and attitude led to the hypotheses that there were differences between the two dialects. On one hand, American dialect mirrors more open stance towards multicultural society, while British English tends to make generalisation that can lead to social isolation. However, in order to confirm these findings more detailed research need to be conducted.

As pointed earlier meaning constantly undergoes changes. It is shaped by the way people perceive and react to the world around them. Diachronic study of these two terms would have a potential of capturing how language has been expanding. On one hand, special historical events might have influenced the way people think and use their native tongues; on the other hand, the current events happening in both nations and the world influence the way language has been operationalized. Capturing a consistent series of collocations over a longer period of time would help to understand how a given language and its speech community have been evolving.
