Over in English. A corpus driven cognitive linguistics study

Christian Wiedel

1. Introduction

This essay builds upon the long tradition of work that has been done on the prepositional use of over. It tests three major linguists view on the polysemy of over on contemporary written English. Their theories use a number of senses of the lexeme and this study compares these senses using empirical and falsifiable methods. The study is done on a data set containing examples of formal as well as informal written English.

Through analysis of each example, the frequencies of the senses over the data set are provided. Using these frequencies, statistical methods can calculate and compare the senses and gives us a comprehensive overview of the patterns of the theories.

Cognitive Linguistics is traditionally done by manually annotating a number of examples in a data set by semantic features. In this study however, the data set is annotated using theories already done on over by Lakoff (1987), Kreitzer (1997) and Tyler & Evans (2001). These theories are compared with the use of Cluster Analysis to provide patterns in the data set.

2. Previous work

The three analyses that are used for this study are all cognitive-linguistic approaches. This entails that the particular lexeme under investigation, in this case over, has more than one distinct sense and that the senses are related (Lakoff 1987).

Lakoff's (1987) study on over extends on Claudia Brugman's previous analysis of the senses of the word. His analysis presents relations among the spatial senses of over and also describes metaphorical extensions of the spatial senses. Lakoff describes seven senses of over:

Christian Wiedel

1. Above-Across sense
2. Above sense
3. Covering sense
4. Reflexive sense
5. Excess sense
6. Repetition sense
7. Metaphorical senses

Lakoff used image schemas to motivate and define the various senses of over, these are depicted using trajectors (TR) and landmarks (LM) which are generalizations of the concepts figure and ground. In the example Sam drove over the bridge, the trajector (TR) is Sam and the landmark (LM) is the bridge (Lakoff 1987).

Lakoff's image schemas describes each sense through the relationship between the TR and LM as well as the path the TR is moving along, shown with an arrow. He further specifies each schema through the use of a combination of abbreviations that specify the nature of the LM and TR and if there is contact between the two. These significations are summarized by Vandeloise (1990) as:

- X – landmark spread out horizontally
- V – landmark spread out vertically
- VX - landmark spread out horizontally and vertically
- C – contact between landmark and trajector
- NC – no contact
- E – trajectory is the term of a movement
- ID – trajectory has one dimension
- P – trajectory is mobile
- MX – trajectory is made of several identical entities
- RO – rotation of the vertical axis
- RF – trajectory is identical to landmark
- G - ground

With these significations, the over in an example like Sam walked over the hill can be described as 1.VX.C meaning the above-across sense, a vertical and horizontal landmark and contact between the landmark and trajector.

The second analysis used for this study is by Kreitzer (1997), which takes a different approach and analyses over as consisting of three relational level schemata; $over_1$ – a static relation defined absolutely on the vertical axis, $over_2$ – a dynamic relation defined absolutely on the vertical and horizontal axes, and $over_3$ – a static relation defined egocentrically (Kreitzer 1997). In fewer words, the senses can be described as static, dynamic and occluding. Furthermore, Kreitzer held that a transformation of an image schema did not provide a new distinct sense, but rather served to widen the applicability of a particular sense (Tyler & Evans 2001).

- $over_1$ – The picture is over the sofa (Static sense)
- $over_2$ – Sam walked over the hill (Dynamic sense)
- $over_3$ – The clouds are over the sun (Occluding sense)

Finally, the last theory used for this study is by Tyler & Evans (2001). The semantic network for over proposed by Tyler & Evans consists of 14 distinct senses shown in figure 1. The distinct senses are shown as dark spheres and an open circle denotes clusters of senses.

Tyler & Evans hold that English prepositions form polysemy networks around a primary sense – the protoscene. Like in Lakoff's work, each distinct sense is also presented by an image schema. Many of the senses are also present in Lakoff's work; the covering sense, reflexive sense and repetition sense for example. But the structuring and network of senses is new and different from Lakoff. Tyler & Evans analysis doubles the amount of senses from Lakoff, from seven to fourteen.

3. Data / Method

The data for this essay come from two written sources; the Corpus of Contemporary American English (COCA) and from a ‘blog’ corpus, compiled in 2005, by Dylan Glynn. The examples from COCA were all taken from newspaper articles between 2010 and 2011 including the New York Times, the Washington Post and the San Francisco Chronicle. 500 examples containing over were collected, 250 from each corpus. The blog corpus is built on on-line personal diaries, the language is informal and in many ways similar to spoken language (Glynn 2010: 5). The goal with using these two very different sources of data was to include both formal and informal writing into the data set and to hopefully get a more nuanced picture of the use of over.

At first 250 examples from each corpora were selected in bulk and were analyzed through the different senses. The examples from COCA were extracted using the on-line interface of its homepage and the examples from the blog corpus were found using multi-file search methods. However, it quickly became evident that the majority of examples were not fit for analysis, as they were not strict prepositions and could not be coded using the respective linguists' theories. Therefore around 300 out of 500 examples had to be discarded and 300 new examples had to be handpicked for further analysis.

The blog corpus was especially hard to draw useable examples from, as the most common use of over in it seemed to be adverbial. Out of a hundred sample sentences containing over around five were useful for the analysis. In comparison, around twenty out of a hundred example sentences from the COCA corpus proved to be fit for analysis. Before the examples were ready to be analyzed in Excel they had to be cleaned from formatting and shortened into a few sentences length. Over all, collecting the examples proved to be very time-consuming.

When the examples were collected the coding according to the different theories and factors began, one column at a time. When the coding was completed all of the finished columns (except the examples) were pasted into a new Excel worksheet. Then the annotated work was prepared for statistical analysis. Depending on what analytical method that was to be used, some data was converted into pivot tables and other times it could be left as it were.

The next step was to run the data through the statistical software R and gather results through two methods; Correspondance Analysis and Cluster Analysis.

Correspondance Analysis takes the frequencies of multiway tables, converts those frequencies into distances and displays the result on a two-dimensional plot. Relative proximity of the data points in the plot represents relative correlation and thus a visual representation of the correlations and differences is created (Glynn 2010: 22).

Cluster Analysis is an exploratory data analysis technique that encompasses a number of different algorithms and methods for sorting different objects into groups. Cluster Analysis therefore is a good technique for discovering structures in data. The technique of Cluster Analysis used for this study is hierarchical cluster analysis. For each cluster in the analysis, this technique provides an AU (Approximately Unbiased) p -value and a BP (Bootstrap Probabilty) value. A p -value is a value between 0 and 1 that indicate how strongly a cluster is supported by the data. The AU p -value is computed by multiscale bootstrap resampling and is a better approximation to an unbiased p -value than the BP value, which is computed by normal bootstrap resampling. Clusters that are highly supported by the data will have large p values (Divjak 2012).

4. Analysis

The coding schema is made out of the theories from Lakoff, Kreitzer and Tyler & Evans. These theories each have their own column and the factors in each respective column are the linguists' senses of over. To make the coding easier, a sheet of coding schema examples was devised, made up of example sentences for each factor of the theories.

From Lakoff's theory only the distinct senses were used, not the signifying abbreviations. For Tyler & Evans and for Kreitzer the theories were used as they were.

Also three new categories were created building on theories from all of the three methods; Landmark, Trajectory and State. Landmark and Trajectory builds on the theories of Lakoff and State from the theories of Kreitzer. The Cluster Analysis requires a factor that it can cluster the results relative to. Therefore, using these new categories, the three theories could be analyzed together in the Cluster Analysis.

Table 1. The coding schema

Category	Factors
A Example
B Year
C Type
D Source
E Corpus	COCA, BLOGS
F Figurativity	literal, metaphorical,
H Tyler_Evans	above_and_beyond, completion, control, covering, examining, focus_of_attention, more, on_the_other_side_of, over_and_above, preference, protoscene, reflexive, repetition, transfer
I Kreitzer	over1, over2, over3
J Landmark	vertical, horizontal, both, abstract
K Trajectory	above, across, covering, reflexive, abstract
L State	static, dynamic

From the onset, the coding schema included analyses by Vandeloise and Dewell as well. However, during the coding they proved to be very difficult to analyze. With Dewell's analysis, useful example sentences proved difficult to construct and since Vandeloise uses the abbreviations created by Lakoff, they were not included either.

Table 2 shows the frequencies of the occurrences of senses from Tyler & Evans, Lakoff and Kreitzer over the data set. It is worth noting that many of the senses, especially senses from Tyler & Evans, have very low frequencies and therefore will be difficult to analyze. Table 3 shows the frequencies of occurrences for State, Landmark and Trajectory categories.

Using Correspondance Analysis, figure 2 provides an overview of how the senses of the three different theories relate to each other. There are three groupings here; cluster 1 contains the over₁ sense (Kreitzer), the above sense (Lakoff) and the protoscene sense (Tyler & Evans). These three senses are fairly closely grouped and thus correlates closely in the data. Also in the cluster closely above the former senses are the more metaphorical senses in Lakoff and Tyler & Evans. They can be hard to distinguish but contain: control, focus_of_attention, metaphorical, completion and preference. Except from the metaphorical sense, all of these theories come from Tyler & Evans.

Cluster 3 in the plot is a grouping around $over_3$ (Kreitzer) and the covering senses from Lakoff and Tyler & Evans. The two different covering senses are almost exactly overlapping which suggest very high correspondence. The $over_2$ sense is also very close to the two covering senses, again suggesting a close match.

In Correspondence Analysis, a feature at the coordinates 0,0 in the plot would indicate a central meaning in the data set. But here, all of the groupings are clearly at different coordinates, indicating distinction between them.

In the previous plot, cluster 2 was illegible and cluttered, but the close-up in figure 3 provides a clearer view. The cluster contains *over*₂ from Kreitzer close to above_across (Lakoff), further down is above_and_beyond, transfer, on_the_other_side_of and examining, all from Tyler & Evans. Even further down are the two repetition senses and the two reflexive senses from Lakoff and Tyler & Evans respectively, closely to each other. And together with over_and_above (Tyler & Evans) is excess from Lakoff.

The previously used Correspondance Analysis converts frequencies to distances and plots them, providing a view of the clusters that make up the data. By using Hierarchical Cluster Analysis, a technique also converting frequencies into distances, the same data is analyzed using a pre-determined distance measure to identify clusters. For this study the distance measure used is the Manhattan algorithm. This visualization takes the form of a dendrogram and offers a clearer picture than the Correspondance Analysis as well as probability values (Glynn 2010: 22).

In this plot, the AU p -values are very close to 100 for the stand-alone sub-clusters; 96 for above_across and over2, 99 for covering and over3, 96 for above and over1. The p -values are also strong for the collection of sub-clusters containing the reflexive, excess, metaphorical and repetition senses.

In all, the senses from Kreitzer get very strong results here with suitable senses from Lakoff indicating a strong support by the data. The over₁ sense is also called the static sense by Kreitzer and the clustering with Lakoff’s above sense, a static sense as well, seems plausible. Furthermore, the over₂ sense, called the dynamic sense by Kreitzer is here clustered together with above_across, which is also a dynamic sense. Finally, the cluster over₃, also called the occluding sense together with the covering sense also seems plausible. The high p-values strongly suggest that these clusters are accurate representations of the data.

The results of the Cluster Analysis verify what was visually suggested in the Correspondance Analysis, the same clusters around Kreitzer's senses show up again. The Cluster Analysis results show that there is a high probability that the same results would be obtained if the study was repeated.

In figure 5, the senses from Tyler & Evans and from Kreitzer are clustered relative to Lakoff. Some senses from Tyler & Evans were not included in this plot, namely the completion, control, examining, focus_of_attention, more, preference and reflexive sense, this due to insufficient occurrences in the data.

Here, over₃ and over₁ again clusters with senses similar to those in figure 4, but this time with senses from Tyler & Evans instead. The covering sense and over₃ sense gets a 99 AU p-value and also the over₁ sense together with protoscene gets a high p-value of 97. The over₂ sense however does not get clustered with only one sense in this plot, like it did in figure 4, instead it gets relatively low p-value of 69 with a sub-cluster. This sub-cluster in its turn contains four other sub-clusters with consistently strong p-values; protoscene and over₁ (97), above_and_beyond (100) with on_the_other_side_of and transfer (100), and over_and_above with reflexive (85).

In the two previous plots, the clustering was easy to distinguish. In figure 6 however, the senses of Lakoff and Tyler & Evans are clustered relative to Kreitzer's senses, and because the theories of Lakoff and Tyler & Evans contain many more senses than Kreitzer's theory, the dendrogram is harder to read.

Naturally, the corresponding senses that are present in both theories get very strong values here; the covering (100), reflexive (95) and repetition (96) senses. One of the most interesting clusters here are the one to the right in the plot including above and protoscene. It has a high AU p -value of 97. In Tyler & Evans' analysis, the protoscene sense is an abstract concept but at least in this data set it seems to correspond well with the concrete sense above from Lakoff. This cluster then has a very low p -value of 48 with the above_across sense.

Also, the metaphorical sense from Lakoff obtains a p -value of 91 with control and focus_of_attention from Tyler & Evans.

In figure 7, the senses of Lakoff, Kreitzer and Tyler & Evans are clustered relative to Landmark. The senses that had a too low frequency and therefore had empty slots in the contingency table, were not included for this plot. Once more, the $over_1$ and $over_3$ senses have strong results together with similar senses in Lakoff and Tyler & Evans and the clusters from previous plots are verified.

In figure 8, the senses of Lakoff and Tyler & Evans are clustered relative to Landmark. Again the senses with too low frequencies were not included for this plot. Here we can see that the senses of Lakoff and Tyler & Evans group with the same senses as in figure 7, even though Kreitzer’s senses were not included for this plot.

5. Summary

This study is limited by the data set that is used. The data is a representation of the corpora used, which in its turn is a representation of written English. Therefore, the conclusions that can be drawn from the results in this study cannot be said to represent the use of these theories of over in English. Further, the study is restrained by low frequencies of some of the features (see table 2). The study is also limited by the senses that are defined in the previous analyses. Given these restrictions, however, some tendencies with high probability values were found.

The first tendency is the cluster with the $over_1$, above and protoscene senses that is seen in many forms through the different plots, with high probability values. All of these senses describe a static relation between the trajector and landmark, so this result could be expected. These senses all have high frequencies in the data set, so the high probability scores should indicate that this cluster is an accurate representation.

Secondly, the $over_3$ sense together with the two covering senses from Lakoff and Tyler & Evans is evident in many of the plots with high scoring results. This was also expected after the annotation was done, the three senses describe the same relationship between the trajector and the landmark. They also have high frequencies over the data set so this mapping should be fairly accurate.

Many of the senses do not have consistent results in the Cluster Analysis, this is possibly due to too low frequencies in the data set. The *over*₂ sense however, does have a very high frequency in the data set but it still does not get consistently strong probability values. Possibly, this is due to the dynamic nature of the *over*₂ sense. It describes all dynamic uses of over, i.e. every instance when over describes a dynamic trajectory over the landmark. This description is then covered by a multiple of more fine-grained senses in Lakoff and Tyler & Evans; therefore the Cluster Analysis struggles to compute the correspondence. Interestingly though, the *over*₂ sense does cluster with the above-across sense from Lakoff with a very strong p-value in figure 4.

For Lakoff's and Tyler & Evans' analyses the senses that are shared between the two naturally get strong results in the Cluster Analysis. These senses also form strong clusters when compared to Kreitzer's senses. The senses in Lakoff and Tyler & Evans that describe more metaphorical uses of over i.e. the completion, focus-of-attention and preference senses have very low frequencies in this data set. Therefore, it is hard to draw any conclusion that can be backed up by the Cluster Analysis for these senses.

Interestingly though, in figure 7, where Lakoff's, Kreitzer's and Tyler & Evans' senses are calculated relative to Landmark, the above sense from Lakoff and the protoscene sense from Tyler & Evans have a very strong p-value of 99. This cluster also forms in figure 8, with a 94 p-value, where Kreitzer's senses were not included.

This study could be improved by using all of the theories that are available on the topic e.g. Lakoff's significations, Dewell's and Brugman's theories. Also, the study could be extended to include syntactic features together with the conceptual theories. With the inclusion of syntactic features though, a usage-feature analysis method should probably be used e.g. Loglinear Regression.

The Cluster Analysis method would mostly benefit from more examples as many of the senses had very low frequencies, especially the senses of Tyler & Evans. With higher frequencies the Cluster Analysis results would get significantly stronger.

I slept at Scotty's and got up today at 11 ish, I stopped for gas yesterday before work and when I went to start my car, it would not turn over. So I called dad and as I was on the phone it started. I drove to Al's and dad let me drive his car to work. The weather's turned angry and everything has blurred over with a wintry light and walking down the lane has taken on the same weight as walking through an empty high school gymnasium at dusk. for sure, but he knew that they could probably see it on him just like they could see the dirt on his hands. - Greg rolled over as he pushed away his thoughts. He curled around Nick, sighing when the older man placed a then ultimately getting in that boat at the same time so it doesn't tip over. And I think that can happen. " # House Republican leaders call the Love to all the Farscape fic writers on LJ who inspire, make me laugh and just knock me over with their insight and finesse. Happy New Year to all of you! Title: Surprise Inspection Author: Eclipse I slept very little, she aroused me, and I pleased her shortly, and she did not pleasure me back, so I stopped, rolled over, and continued to think about these last fleeting seconds in the third movement and blocking the roads. the past couple days the wind has blown our mailbox over a couple times and today part of our fence by the oak tree came down and also the garbage cans are blowing and started to straighten it, and the whole freaking shelf fell over..like the whole aisle of shelf, and all the horror section fell on the floor blocking the kitchen and all the candy went everywhere..its a They hold "gay pride" parades in an attempt to force their views down everyone else's throat so to speak. If people aren't willing to roll over and accomodate their desires, they attack those people as

Turn the brussels sprouts over and cook on the other side until nicely browned and tender, three to five is hottest of a 425-degree oven. When they had browned, I flipped them over to finish cooking. # The first time I used more brown sugar, which the tomato until charred around the edges along with the garlic, turning the tomatoes over to char the other side. Add the oregano; stir to toast, about not to have to drive on the bridge or the unlit road i travel to get to class. people here are such horrid drivers. i saw a car turned over on the way home a bit ago. yeah. any way. i belive class is still She conjures tears, fear.. Though-- not tears FOR fears but She is so small and breakable An accidental wind could blow her over And you'd never see her again But who would notice?

i bought a big pack of fireworks, which i went ahead and popped out in san eli but the coolest thing was when the last big firework i popped tipped over and started shooting and us and lisa's car... - oldest, but she still plays along with the game. I glance down at the note, and I start laughing so hard, I can't breathe. I almost fell over. laughing that laugh. The one that makes no sound and turns , I was pulling onto Country Club Road off of West Jones and something caught my attention and I looked up, and there is a truck flipped over on its side right in front of my car so I slam on brakes and like, a foot away from a huge lightpole. and the firemen said that if that pole hadnt been there then we would have rolled over a couple times into the ditch that was there. i was crying sooo much.. i the freezer door is so broken. its ridiculous. its falling the fuck over. literally. (that was a big long run on paragraph and i dont care) blah. lost my train of thought. well the last thing that happened happened: when our waitress showed up, the hostess warned her to be careful with our table because I had already almost fallen over; I drank a flaming "swinger", while it was on fire!!; they served a .3 meter cubed I stretched a little just now and found a spot on my back that is completely sore and knotted to the point of tears.... yet I can't feel it if I hunch over some. Ugh I need a new bed... I wake up sore... this is not a good thing He decided it was time for a change of position. "Get up and bend over the side of the couch." Draco made no attempt at abandoning his current position as he was steadily approaching climax, but when Harry lifted him See, as far as I know, I'm not affected by caffeine. And I don't mean that I drank so much coffee or soda over the years that I'm now immune to it. I mean that I have never felt anything from ingesting caffeine indoors. # " We knew it was close by, but they told us over and over again that it was safe, safe, safe, safe, " the knives come raining down. He replays the scene in his waking hours, over and over in his head. Describing it, he raises an arm up to vibrate and it can lay by my face. i hope it doesnt wake the boy up. it always does though. i should change my number and not give it to very many people. starting over feels nice sometimes. eh well. and pretty much everything going on in my life that is casuing me to feel this way. and as if all of this starting over business and understanding my feelings wasn't enough, and there were not when I was a wee one, I had the crazy belief that when we dream, we visit ourselves in other dimensions, and that's why sometimes we visit certain places over and over in our dreams. services and deep cuts in college and university budgets. " This is 2003 all over again, " Dewhurst said, alluding to the most recent legislative session that dealt empathy from significant others - parents, priests, siblings or friends. Over and over again in interviews, Oliner says, heroes give the same answers to the question , " she said. " They are going to see our store over and over. They might say, ' Oh, there is the Gold & Silver place I used to love that movie when I was a wee one, but after years of being forced to watch it over and over again I have come to hate it. So the Heards' dinner tonight was ok I guess. Me, Pip, and Kerry rode over there together and almost died like 32743284 times. We had a pretty good time jokin around w/ Ms. Heard and C.B....
At seven tonight Pattie and I are cruising over to Albuquerque's "Sunport" for a long weekend visit with Karen and Richard Adler, Patrick's parents. We'll eat tons of amazing food, see some sights, and Annie and Liz were all like what wrong and so sweet to me and everything and i was really trying then we went over to sections and George is like blah blah i really couldn't pay attention to what then George says we can go but he wasnt to talk to me, but i really didn't wanna talk to him but i kinda went over there and he was like 'i know your capable they just pushed a lot on you tonight and Then I came home and hung out for a while...did some homework. Me and Ashlee then walked over to choir and this really awesome singing group sang for us. Then I went to class with Ashlee and took sunday we went over to pop-op's. It was weird this year without grandma. Where we normally stay there for four hours, everything was done and people left after two. I felt kind of bad leaving pop so today was pretty eventful after school i was walkin over to my tennis match and i call megan and we talk and stuff.....then as i walk into walrond park, guess whos drivin around....thats right...its Dustin and Daniel (also from my high school, class of 03 though) by the fence and I decide to say hi. I walk over there to say what's up (they were standing at the fence from the inside, while Micky was

I can't even begin to compare when I send her gifts. I still need to find the right stuff to send over. But, anyway, she is doing well. It seems she and Bart are fine and she says her "problem" will be
It was originally a GBA game, but they converted it to DS and then brought it over here in that format. It works fine as a GBA game, but I like it even more as a DS.
i ended up walking over to christian and getting the best hug from him. sigh... i swear to jesus he's my fuckin gaurdian angel...he's my best friend in the world and he just so Ashleigh called him ke back and he ended up bringing us Mcdonalds....yummy!!!Then we went over to my sister Jenny's boyfriend Mike's open house and so we were trying to find a way to get money .. so Ashleigh thought she might have money at her house so we went over there and none of the doors were left but Oh well I guess. I'm really freaking tired too! Josh keeps me up too late on the phone. I wasn't allowed to go over to his house last night :(Cuz my Dad's and he's like "yeah well...prolly in another room though!" and I was like "YOU WOULD BE TOO IF HE CAME OVER HERE!" lol idk it was actually kinda funny. But I told him he
