Journalists looking for an academic to provide an expert comment or background on a story, please search by topic in our list of researchers.

Sociology and social anthropology can be applied in many social science areas when wanting to analyse for example social structures, relations and actions, or identities in society, in groups, and in individuals.

The Department of Sociology's expertise includes environmental and developmental issues, school and education, governance and control, criminology and social policy. Power relations and social cleavages, especially those based on ethnicity, gender, sexuality and social class are the focus of much of the department's research.
