Abstract

Title: To condemn - or not - the violence after the Charlie Hebdo attack: alliance or cleavage between Muslims and French Catholics?

The attack against Charlie Hebdo in January 2015 added a new episode to the question of the relationships between Muslims and Catholics in France. Neither the first ones nor the second were in favor of this anticlerical newspaper. Nevertheless, believers of both denominations participated to the demonstration that followed.

But we heard a lot that Muslims were under-represented in the processions. What proof have we about it? Moreover, if it is true, is it the consequence of the disapproval of this demonstration, or of a propensity of the believers of this religion to demonstrate less than other social groups? Several surveys can help us to answer to these important questions – the French polls in January 2015, but also the scientific surveys.

Title: The drama triangle of religion and violence

Abstract: Few topics are as widely discussed and as often misrepresented as the relation between religion and violence. Defenders and attackers of religion are equally vocal in claiming that religion is or is not a causal factor in widespread contemporary violence (or in overcoming violence in peace-building). In doing so, these voices don't contribute to a nuanced understanding of the issues at stake. Expanding the classical notion of the drama triangle (Karpman), this paper claims that in the performance of religious violence the bystander is intrinsically connected to the dyadic aggressor – victim relation as helper, rescuer, judge, witness, or enabler. As these processes function on the individual as well as on the collective and political level, we need a more differentiated model for analysing the intersection of religion and violence. Looking at several contemporary examples of religious violence, the paper will explore the intersection of religion and violence from the various roles in the drama triangle

Title: What's Love Got to Do with It? Ultrationalism, Islamophobia, and hate crime in Sweden

Sweden is known for its tolerance and liberal policies. Yet, sixty percent of Sweden's mosques and Islamic centres had been subjected to threats, vandalism or arson. Muslim women, in particular, seem to be targets of hate crimes but rarely report incidents to the police. In 2014, the Sweden Democrats, a proto-fascist nationalist party, gained close to 13 percent of the national vote after a fervent anti-Muslim campaign supported by a network of social media outlets in which incitements to violence against Muslim-Swedes proliferated. Based on fieldwork, surveys, and open-ended interviews with one hundred Muslim citizens and forty anti-Muslim activist, as well as a review of anti-Muslim online calls to arms, this essay addresses the surge of anti-Muslim hate crime in Sweden, exploring the role of violence in the proto-fascist attempt to 'recreate' a homogenous nation that did never exist. While the literature on ultranationalist inspired hate crime typically see the perpetrators as angry white men, the nationalists interviewed in this study claimed to act out of love, not hate. By examining how love and hate may reinforce each other, this essay argues that anti-Muslim hate crime is a form of political violence that patrols the borders and identities it produces, and shows the extent to which victims may adopt the perpetrator's gaze and experience their own bodies as deviant, and out of place in their own home country

Title: Education in Nonviolence:
The Study of Sacred Texts as Spiritual Practice

Abstract

The paper offers an account of education in nonviolence grounded in the first of Emmanuel Levinas's Talmudic readings "Toward the Other." I begin by exploring Levinas's unique philosophy of religious education, which nurtures responsibility for the other through sacred study, as a part of a counter-Enlightenment alternative to Enlightenment religious thought. I then consider the question of whether one must forget in order to forgive great wrong doing such as South African Apartheid or the Holocaust of European Jewry. Through an examination of Levinas's treatment of several Talmudic passages, I argue that the Jewish tradition takes a paradoxical approach to this question, which may be instructive to others as well. We should forget in order to remember wrong doing. The spiritual process that both perpetrators and victims must undergo in order to embrace this paradox, I contend, is a genuine education in nonviolence.

Title: Violence from a protestant-theological perspective
Martin Rothgangel

The issue of violence leads into the depth and inscrutability of theological reflection. Since the Bible unsparingly brings up the dark sides of God and of human nature, they accordingly must be considered theologically. Martin Luther's position on violence, which is to be interpreted in the light of his doctrine of the two kingdoms, has developed a significant impact.

Theological reflections on the issue of violence are also important with regards to religious education: There is a current trend to focus solely on the gentle Jesus and to avoid God's dark sides. However, studies from the field of developmental psychology show that children have a clear understanding of good and evil. In addition, an "only" loving God hardly withstands painful experiences of children and young people.

Title: Against Religiously Motivated Violence: Religious Education's Contribution to Peaceful Relationships Between Different Religions

Increasingly, Religious Education is expected to be a remedy against religiously motivated violence. This expectation is ambivalent. On the one hand, it implies a new appreciation of Religious Education as a school subject. On the other hand, it can be viewed as an attempt to use this subject for purposes that have little to do with religion but most of all with societal needs. Moreover, the demand is often based on the one-sided assumption that religion is responsible for violence while, in fact, violence can never be explained by only looking at the religious motives involved.

From a theological and educational point of view, Religious Education can and should contribute to

- an understanding of the complex relationship between religion and violence by gaining insight into this relationship, by identifying the peaceful motives inherent in different religions and by critically discussing non-peaceful religious motives and developing a critical stance towards them;
- the ability to take the perspective of the other, especially in relationship to religion, which presupposes knowledge about different religions as well as understanding which, in the case of interreligious relationships, again can be specified as perspective taking;
- attitudes towards members or adherents of religious traditions other than one's own, especially concerning peace and tolerance, respect and mutual recognition;
- competences for appropriately behaving and acting in interreligious contexts.

These tasks are defined on a theoretical level. In the future, they should also be subjected to empirical testing concerning the effects of Religious Education. This is why the paper will also consider possibilities for empirical research in this field.

Title: Eastern Orthodox perspectives on violence

The contemporary national Eastern Orthodox churches have often been accused of having either direct or ideological part in violence across Eastern Europe in the post-communist era. In several scholarly analysis, the churches have even been to some degree linked with ethnic and national violence. Therefore, they have been identified as an ideological root for a distinctive ethno-religious nationalism either blocking the way for a pluralistic society or simply defying it. These cases of violence and conflicts, as well as the subsequent analysis of them does in themselves only points towards a practical and visible manifestation of conflicts, and therefore, they do not answer a broader theological question, namely the question of the general position of the eastern orthodox church regarding violence in general.

This paper will address this broader question and discuss the co-relation and intersection between Orthodoxy and violence. The Orthodox religious tradition's perspectives and positions on religion and violence will be drawn from concrete examples of its theological teaching. The discussion of the Orthodox position will be based on the Orthodox canonical laws and the writing of the Church fathers in light of the Neo-patristic school's interpretation of both traditions.

Title: Religion, Violence and Genocide: in Narratives of Survivors from the War in Bosnia and Herzegovina

Abstract

The starting point of this study is the war that took place in northwestern Bosnia and Herzegovina in the 1990s. Serbian soldiers and police targeted their use of violent force directly against the civilian populations in northwestern Bosnia. In their quest to expel Bosniacs and Croats from this area, Serbian soldiers and police used mass executions, forced flight, systematic rape, and concentration camps. The aim of this study is analyzing the narratives of survivors of the war in northwestern Bosnia. The focus lies on analyzing interviewees' description of war-time violence and also analyzing discursive patterns that contribute in constructing the phenomenon "war violence". Analysis shows that the interpersonal interactions that caused the violence continue even after the violent situation is over. Recollections from perpetrators and those subjected to violence of the war do not exist only as verbal constructions in Bosnia of today. Stories about violent situations live their own lives after the war and continue being important to individuals and social life. The crimes committed in northwestern Bosnia are qualified as genocide according to indictments against former Serbian leaders Radovan Karadžić and Ratko Mladić. All interviewees in this study experienced and survived the war in northwestern Bosnia. These individuals have a present, ongoing relation with these communities: Some live there permanently, and some spend their summers in northwestern Bosnia. Institutions in the administrative entity Republika Srpska (to which northwestern Bosnia now belong administratively) deny genocide, and this approach to war-time events becomes a central theme in future, post-war analysis of the phenomena "war violence", and "reconciliation". Therefore, it is very important to analyze the political elite's denial of the systematic acts of violence during the war that have been conveyed by the Hague Tribunal, the Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina on War Crime, and Bosnian media. The narratives in my empirical material seem to be influenced by (or coherent with) the rhetoric mediated in these fora. When informants emphasize extermination and the systematization of violence during the war, they produce and reproduce the image of a mutual struggle on a collective level. The aim of this struggle seems to be that the described acts of violence be recognized as genocide.

Title: Dialogue between "The children of Abraham" and the problem of violence and justice:

F. M. Dostoevsky and D. S. Merezhkovsky.

In this article the problem of correlation between the violence and the religion is treated as a metaphysical problem of correlation between the multiple and the conflict, in which the givenness of the conflict is perceived as a manifestation of plurality and freedom of the Being. Economics, sociology, psychology and political science remind us of the existence of certain spaces of conflict in the society and in the world, showing off some of their causes, ways to resolve, reconciliations or softening. Metaphysics of the society and of the conflict in this case is still necessary because always the question (and metaphysics - this is more a science of right questions, than answers) about the ultimate aim of a Being, which is multiple, free, dynamic and therefore susceptible to conflict; and because the world is often in the situation of paradox and in a situation of internal conflict, or, on the contrary, in the situation of the masking of the wars of different origin and manifestation. In this regard, the article analyzes the Christian idea of kenosis in Fyodor Dostoyevsky in the form in which it appears in his novel "The Brothers Karamazov" and most of all in the "Poem of the Grand Inquisitor" and in the interpretation of this by D. S. Merezhkovsky. The tragedy of the Grand Inquisitor is connected both to the correlation between the Jewish soul and soul only "Christian" in the Christianity, both to the relationship between the Judeo-Christianity and the Islam. In this regard, is analyzed also a kind of natural crossing between the eschatological problem of a possible and exceptional "already" and the eschatological problem of possible and exclusive "not yet" of the human salvation. On the one hand, the eschatological presence of the Jewish people reminds Christians that both God's peoples, together with the Islamic people are actually still waiting for the full implementation of the Kingdom of God, and that the joy of the Resurrection of Christ can not and should not erase the pursuit of a more just and human world. On the other hand, the presence of Jewish people said that, in some sense before being grateful for the Resurrection of Christ and the prospect of a general resurrection, a believing Christian can and should be grateful to the Father for the gift of Life itself. The religions of Islam and Judaism, sisters in Abram, remind Christians that by the Incarnation shines the Face of the Creator, about the Kingdom of whom Jesus came to proclaim to the world, and that the Church is not the aim, but the means to the Kingdom of God (the Second Vatican Council developed clear doctrine: "The Church is instrument of the Kingdom of God"). This study also addressed to the problem of justification or refutation of the death penalty and the so-called "legitimate defense" of individuals or peoples in the light of biblical teaching.

EDUCATION AND RESEARCHES

2014 - Registration for the second year of joint supervision doctorate at the University La Sapienza of Rome.

2013 - Preparation in the second doctorate at the State University of St. Petersburg (SPbGU, www.spbu.ru), chair of the History of Russian Literature of the Philological Faculty, Thesis Director prof. Boris Averin Valentinovič; working title of the thesis: "Analysis and comparative history of the poetics of the 'tragic' in the Russian and European modern novel (with particular attention to the work of A. Manzoni and F.M. Dostoevsky)". The first concrete outcome of this research project is already in the monograph published in Russia. Now I would like to focus the research on the problem of Redemption between Manzoni and Dostoevsky.

2002/2006 – Russian PHD in St Petersburg. June 15, 2006 I discussed successfully (approval of the Scientific Council unanimously) the diplom of "Kandidat filosofskich nauk" (Russian PhD in philosophy) at SPbGU (State University of St. Petersburg), with the work "The problem of salvation in novels of F. M. Dostoyevsky: the philosophical-anthropological aspect". A part of his writings are available in Russian, including the "avtoreferat" (academic abstract and plan), on the site of the chair of Religious studies of the same SPbGU: <http://drevn.narod.ru/kapilupi.html>.

2000/2002 - Training course abroad and second degree in Russia. In 2000 I won a grant from the University of Rome La Sapienza for one year of specialization abroad, in Saint Petersburg, at the Russian Academy of Christian Humanities in St. Petersburg (then Russian Christian Institute of Humanities). I was interested in the Russian philosophical problematic. I choose as Rukovoditel' (Thesis Director) Konstantin Glebovič Isupov, among the leading Russian experts of the philosophy of literature and curator of the tomes PRO ET CONTRA, published by the publishing house of the Institute. I validated my Italian degree in Russia and integrated the studies done with a second degree in philosophy obtained with honors (Krasny diplom, "red diploma") on 25 June 2002.

1999, 17 July - Degree in Arts and Philosophy at the University of Rome La Sapienza. Title of the thesis: The mission to Russia of father F.M. Gaillard (1908-1911). Thesis Director: Professor Antonello Biagini, chair of the History of Eastern Europe. Co-Director: Professor Rita Tolomeo. Final score: 110/110 and praise.

1993/1996 - Three-year course of Russian language and literature at the University of Rome "La Sapienza". I passed the written examinations and oral language, with a total vote of 30/30, 30/30 and 28/30.

Title: Violence in the Sunna

The question of violent material in the Sunna is a very complex one. Throughout Muslim history, various models were developed to deal with violent material in the Aḥādīṭ. What all the violent interpretations have in common is the development of a Ġihād-literature alongside the historical events, that the Ḥadīṭ was to be resurrected and the innovation in the religion (Bid‘a) was supposed to be battled to achieve purity of religion. The paper asks for the connected reasons and how to deal with this issue.

Title: Autonomy- A male privilege in Islam?

Abstract

The advent of Islam onto pre-Islamic Arabia brought about a new social order that required a reinterpretation and revaluation of the Self and its relationship to fellow men, underneath one absolute transcendental power.

This new force intended to break through the suppressing tribal structures, in order to give way to the unfolding of the individualized and autonomous "person". This newly gained individuality goes hand in hand with the transgression of the tight hierarchical borders of the tribe into the broader framework of the Islamic umma which places each person on equal footing regardless of sex, language or origin ( Quran 49:13). This breakthrough improved the situation of women in particular, by turning the mumin/a into a legal person who is to be protected by the divine law from unrighteousness and despotism.

Paradoxically, it is the same divine source, which is actually to prevent the relapse into old habits that provides the fertile ground for religiously justified violence, beginning from "gentle" disciplining to life-threatening actions as we encounter them in the media time after time, often under the banner of "HRV" (honour related violence). The presentation will discuss a particular part of Quran 4:34, which is frequently used as a reference in connection to religiously justified violence against women. However, the presentation does not intend to question the source nor the validity of the verse, but rather a discussion on the theological consequences that emerge from the classical understanding of the verse, which prevents women from being autonomous, as a theologically approved and therefore downplayed kind of violence against women in Islam.

Short CV

Ranja Ebrahim is a doctoral student and a prae doctoral assistant at the department of Islamic religious education. Her field of research comprises primarily those subjects which are related to the qur'anic revelation in terms of its aspects as a way of god-man communication, i.e. in particular the reasons of revelation (asbab an-nuzul), the types of god-man communication, god-man relationship (Islamic- philosophical and theological approaches) as well as the drafting of a pedagogical conception which works with the asbab an- nuzul that aims to "revive" the student-god communication within the framework of islamic religious education at school. Besides her main occupation at the University of Vienna, is currently engaged in teaching at the Vienna teacher`s college.

Beforehand, she obtained a Master degree in Arabic and Islamic studies from the University of Vienna.

Title: Social distance and the perception of threat from refugees

Abstract

The Social Identity Theory (SIT) explains the Inter-group relations especially groups that are in conflict through the concept of in-group favoritism and out-group derogation. According to this theory, when in-group members perceive a threat to the in-group, we favor the in-group, this further reflects prejudices and discrimination against the outgroup that could result in violence between groups.

The aim of this study is to see whether we can predict the social distance towards refugees on the basis of threat perception and belief system. A total of 167 subjects on an average age of 24.3 were involved in the study. The simple linear regression was used to predict the social distance on the basis of threat perception and belief system. The data shows that the perception of the symbolic threat is presented as the predictor of social distance towards the refugees. Further, the perception of the real threat is not in correlation with the social distance. The study will also discuss the power of the presence of two types of threats as well as gender differences in social distance.

Key words: Perception of threat, social distance, refugees

Title: Muslim Theologians of Non-Violence

Abstract

The presentation will survey contemporary approaches of Muslim thinkers, scholars, and activists who address the problem of interpretations of Islamic religious sources that have been taken to justify or even promote violence.

The approach of the paper will be to survey, categorize, and analyze the strategies adopted by these contemporary Muslim thinkers who wish to recover or perhaps uncover potential resources for non-violence and peacemaking within the tradition.

Some prominent figures who will be considered include Said Jawdat, Wahiduddin Khan, and Mohammed Abu Nimer.

Title: Journeying into a Peaceful Islam: A Worldview Framework Approach

Abstract

In the minds of many in Europe and North America, the words Islam and violence often go hand in hand. Islam is readily associated with 9/11, Afghanistan, Osama Bin Laden, car bombings, the oppression of women, the persecution of Christians, and more. But what if Islam really does not fit this caricature? Like Christianity, it is all too often simplified, vilified and misunderstood.

This presentation will speak about a pedagogical model that engages Muslims and non-Muslims alike in discovering a comprehensive Islam for themselves as a journey into its two most central tenets (belief in God and being a good person) and how to live those out peacefully in the context in which they find themselves. This model is grounded in a worldview framework that is transdisciplinary and comprehensive and seeks to present an Islam that is open, dynamic and peace-loving – not prescriptive, static or violent.

Title: The Islamic Foundations of a Plural Society in the Context of Religious Pluralism

Abstract

The concept of religious pluralism is a multidimensional issue and capable of arousing controversy. It is difficult to define this term in a way which is acceptable to everyone. As a name of the worldview, religious pluralism deals with an attitude, approach or policy regarding the diversity of religious belief systems co-existing in a society. The paper intends to shed light on the explanations of the concept of religious pluralism and their relevance to the Qur'anic teachings and prophetic traditions while touching upon some common misconceptions of Muslims and non-Muslims such as ijtiĥād related misconceptions. The Qur'ān explicitly and unequivocally prohibits the use of coercion in faith because coercion would violate the fundamental human right-the right to a free conscience. Violence and cruelty are not in the spirit of the Qur'ān, nor are they found in the life of the Prophet who has not come to cancel out the teachings of Abraham, Moses and Jesus (peace be upon them all), nor in the lives of such saintly Muslim scholars as Rumi, Niyazi-i Misri, Yunus Emre, Ahmed Yesevi, Hacı Bektař-i Veli, Bediüzzaman, Fethullah Gülen and some other similar figures. The paper emphasizes quoting some verses that the Qur'ān is a pluralistic document and accordingly there must be no compulsion in religion as clearly stated in the Muslim Holy Book.

Keywords: Qur'ān, Prophet, religious pluralism, coercion, faith, human rights.

Title: Civil Disobedience in Islamic Politico-Legal Theory: a challenging balance between justice and stability

Abstract

Debates upon civil disobedience in Islam dates back to early Islamic theo-political history in terms of practical contexts, involving the accession of Abu Bakr to Caliphate as the first political successor to the Prophet Muhammad, to the exclusion of Ali from taking part in consultations leading to transition of power and the ensuing resentment of Ali with capacity of civil disobedience to develop in due course. In theory, civil disobedience in Islamic political thought reflects a line of tension in balancing between administrative “justice” and social “stability”. The emphasis upon “justice” in public administrative context holds the capacity to activate civil disobedience with possibility of ‘civil strife’, while the emphasis upon “stability” holds the capacity to appease the idea of “commanding right and forbidding wrong”. The line of tension across civil disobedience discloses the potentiality of divergence between theoretical “perfectionism” in upholding the value based principles, and practical “consequentialism” in safeguarding the utilitarian objectives of human deeds. This paper will survey the idea of civil disobedience in Islamic politico-legal theory across tension between theory and practice in multiple contexts.

VIOLENCE VS. RELIGION

Abstract

That the religion is the main if not the only cause of violence seems nowadays self-evident almost to everyone. Strongly supported by the world's most influential mass media, this accusation, started some two hundred years ago, today brought its verdict by proclaiming the religion guilty for the crime of social violence and war crimes. Heartily supporting the accusation, many distinctive academics offered their expert's opinion to prove that "religion itself produce a perverse solidarity that we must find some way to cut", by pointing that "it is only the religious faith which is strong enough to motivate such utter madness in otherwise sane and decent people". Brainwashed by this synchronized public lynch, even the most moderate and neutral people may still believe that the violence is in some way essentially inherent to religion as such, notably to Islam. While prescribing to religion the fanatical bigotry as its immanent ingredient, the accusation points to the liberal state as the only mean by which 'the perverse solidarity' could be destroyed, and 'the utter madness' would not be allowed to intrude never again on 'the sane and decent' political stage.

The paper insists that the root of violence goes much deeper than the history of organized human society and all its institution, including the religion. Aggressivity, violence and warfare have always been a part of human existence, as well as of political life. The greatest wars in history were secular in its character, and religion had little or no influence in any stage of this wars.

In conclusion, the paper offers arguments which proves that religion could not be guilty for the modern world violence. Contrariwise, it is the violence stimulated and organized by the secular liberal state, which is directed against religion, since it is perceived as the main obstacle for gaining the total control over all aspects of human life. The projects called The End of History and the Last Man, and The Clash of Civilizations, have clearly and more than explicitly disclosed the agenda of this strategic program.

Title: Building a mosque in Bucharest; inter-religion tensions or social reflex against Islam

Abstract

The careful observation of religious life, the changes society knew in general and the religious behavior in particular have fueled, in the sociology of religion studies, the known theories of secularization. The scientific discussions in this regard, based on surveys and information from various fields followed the explanation and understanding of the evolution of religion in contemporary societies.

From linear theory of secularization, which would have led to the disappearance of religion in modern societies, and to their denial, a few years later, the religion has demonstrated the importance, the vitality and the influence it can have on human behavior and on the evolution of contemporary societies.

In countries of Central and Eastern Europe, especially the Orthodox, who lived for 50 years under the totalitarian communist regime, and where religion has been dramatically censored by the atheist regime, religious behavior has experienced a marked revival after the fall of communism, more active than the one in the Occidental secularized space. The dynamism of the religion to which we refer has been fueled by an attitude and a strong ethnic-religious connection founded on the historical evolution of the respective people, mentality and attitude encouraged by politicians lacking public legitimacy and social strategies in search of quick electoral support, which has favored the emergence of an equally nationalist and populist discourse, which calls into question even the functioning of the religious pluralism.

In Romania, the European country with a tolerant behavior toward religious pluralism, we have seen recently, fundamentalist nationalist tendencies visible in the context of building a Muslim mosque in Bucharest. We wonder if this reflex is specific behavioral modernity in general of the religious contemporary European pluralism or it is a characteristic of historical reflex of the majority Romanian Orthodox Christian society. Is there a risk that such intolerant behavior, ethnic and religious to increase the emergence of extremist nationalistic tendencies and religious fundamentalism to a wider level in the European society and in other Christian countries than those in the South-East of Europe and in the Balkans especially? How can religious education temper such extremist nationalist tendencies?

Here are some highlights of our study that tries to identify more closely the ratio of the mutual influence between religion and violence in contemporary European society.

Key words: Romania, Islam, contemporary society, religious pluralism, religious education, religion and violence

Title: Embracing the other: Lessons from History and Contemporary Christian Thought

Abstract

Christianity's story from the very beginning is a story followed upon a string sense of tending and caring for the vulnerable and the oppressed expressed in the Old Testament. There are numerous commands through which Yahweh the Lord reminds his chosen people to welcome the foreigner, deal fairly with the poor who look for justice, and protect the widow and the orphan. Jesus summarizes this in the twofold command of loving God and loving one's neighbor which is extended to encompass the enemy.

Christianity has not always lived up to this ideal with some dire consequences for that. There have been throughout its history though, thinkers who have committed themselves in fleshing out this twofold command. One of them is Maximus the Confessor, a seventh century monk and a theologian whose writings on asceticism revolve around the principle of love and renunciation for the sake of the other.

In this presentation we will see how Maximu's thought can be relevant for us today, and compare it to the thinking of few contemporary Christian thinkers who explore the identity and otherness in the light of Jesus twofold command.

Nedžad Grabus

Title: Misunderstanding and misinterpretation of religion

Abstract

Man is a being of religion. Religion has its transcendental and earthly side. It is Abrahamic traditions that play a dominant role in the international relationships. Abrahamic religions rest on similar foundations of ethical monotheism. Religion is not made up merely of fundamental beliefs of transcendental nature. Religions are burdened by wish for power as well as language and national hegemonies. This is the reason why conflicts arising on behalf of religion occur so frequently. In this paper, we shall attempt to explore some causes of misunderstanding and misinterpretation of religion. We will particularly attempt to define relationships between religious values and the problem of violence that occurs in the name of religion.

Short CV Nedžad Grabus

Prof. dr. Nedžad Grabus is a professor of theology at the Faculty of Islamic Studies in Sarajevo, Bosnia and Herzegovina.

He has been included in the interreligious dialogue from his student's years on. He was the editor of the first interreligious program in Sarajevo that dealt with topics of general importance and covered both Islamic and Christian issues. He participated in and lectured at various religious conferences all over the world, from Vatican, Oslo, Copenhagen and Cairo to Medina, Vienna, Istanbul and numerous others. Presently he holds the position of Mufti of the Islamic Community in Slovenia, which makes up for his credibility in respect of this function. In Slovenia, he is a member of the Institute for Ecumenical Theology and Interreligious Dialogue as well as the member of Editorial Board of the technical publication Unity and Dialogue. He continues to publish texts of interreligious nature and dialogue in the English, German, Slovenian and Bosnian languages. Prof. dr. Grabus maintains excellent connections and cooperation with European institutions and universities. He is a well-known mediator between and integrator of Christian and Islamic thought and philosophy, having been, inter alia, a guest lecturer at the protestant academy in Badball, at the catholic faculty in Maribor and numerous other locations and occasions. He personally organized and lectured at the international scientific symposium "Gaining Mutual Respect through Dialogue" combining lecturers from the Faculty of Islamic Studies in Sarajevo and Faculty of Theology in Ljubljana. He is a universally known and highly respected public figure, featuring in TV and radio programs and in the general intellectual sphere. He is the author of the book titled "Coexistence is our Way". He has recently published the book titled "Belief, knowledge and cognition".

Title: The Complex Relationship between Violence and Religion

Abstract

Terrorist attacks by religiously motivated people have led to an identification of religion and violence. In a first step this paper will show that such an identification is much too simple because it overlooks the complex relationship between violence and religion. Looking at some examples in modern history and referring to some more sober publications on this topic will emphasize that it is really us human beings who are mainly responsible for all acts of violence. A second step will show us how the French-American literary critic and anthropologist René Girard's sees the relationship between violence and religion. With the help of Girard we can distinguish between the violent sacred that characterized the archaic past and the holy that is at the center of the Abrahamic religions (Judaism, Christianity, and Islam). A third part of the paper will deal more directly with the holy by discussing different images of God. We will find out that wherever God is understood along the lines of human power acts of violence are easily justified with the help of religion whereas a God that is characterized by renunciation in regard to power (kenosis) puts human violence into question. This last part relies mainly on insights from the French philosopher and mystic Simone Weil. Wherever human beings imitate God's renunciation they can open up towards each other without hatred and violence.

Short CV

Wolfgang Palaver is Professor of Catholic Social Thought and Dean of the School of Catholic Theology at the University of Innsbruck, Austria (where he earned his doctorate). From 2007 to 2011 he was president of the "Colloquium on Violence and Religion". He has published books and articles on religion and violence, Thomas Hobbes, Carl Schmitt and René Girard. His most recent book is René Girard's Mimetic Theory (Michigan State University Press, 2013).

Islamic Radicalism
(An epistemic Perspective)

Abstract

The aim of the paper is to show that, what we call Islam, in essence, is Quran. In this context, all what is said about Islam, but is not included in Quran, is not Islam; it is interpretation of it, and, interpretation is knowledge. Knowledge in its radical sense is always subject to correction or re-interpretation of it. Radicalism from Islamic perspective means continuation with the transfinite procedure of knowing and understanding god's words, with no mediator, as truth or essence, but yes, as knowledge and opinion, using your own mind. Radicalism as the word itself entails, from Islamic perspective, is salvation for humanity. The self-proclaimed leaders in knowledge, although knowledge yielding procedure knows no leaders, are the main obstacle of our living in harmony with god and his words. Being radical means to try to act and live in accordance with gods words, of course, the way you understand them. So there is nothing wrong with being radical. The problem comes when we do not act radically. Those who do not behave radically with gods words are immature generations and, immaturity is the inability to use ones understanding without guidance from another.

Surname	Saad
First name	Bashar
Place of birth	Um el Fahm
Nationality	Israel + Swiss

Education

1965 - 1975	Primary and secondary school in Um el Fahm
1976 - 1979	Grammar school in Afula
1979	Matriculation exams (Bagrut) with majors in natural sciences

Higher education

1980 - 1985	Studies in Biology at the University of Zurich Prediploma examinations in: Biology I-IV, inorganic Chemistry, Organic Chemistry and Mathematics
-------------	--

1985	Graduation in Biology (Genetics, Developmental Biology, Cytology) and Biochemistry (Biochemistry III-IV, Medical Biochemistry, Hormones, Membranes) (Final evaluation: 95/100) Master thesis under the supervision of PD. Dr. E. Hauschtek-Jungen: "Autoradiographic investigations of RNA-synthesis during spermatogenesis of Drosophila subobscura " (Final evaluation: 100/100)

1986 - 1988	Graduate studies under the supervision of Prof. Dr. H.R. Bosshard at the Institute of Biochemistry, University of Zurich. Research and Teaching assistant at the Institute of Biochemistry and the Institute of Zoology

1988	Presentation of the Ph.D. thesis: "Conformational antigenic determinants on native and denatured Cytochrome c - a protein- and immunochemical investigation"

Scientific record

- Nov. 1988 - Mar. 1991: Postdoctoral studies at the Institute of Neurobiology at the Swiss Federal Institute of Technology Zurich (ETH Zurich). Head: Prof. Dr. M. Schachner
- Apr. 1991 - Dec. 1993: Postdoctoral studies at the Institute of Toxicology at the ETH Zurich and University of Zurich. Collaboration with PD. Dr. P. Maier in the Department of Cellular Toxicology. Head: Prof. Dr. Zbinden
- Jan. 1994- Aug. 2000 “Oberassistent” = Assistant Prof. at the Institute of Polymers at the ETH Zurich and at the Research Division, Dep. of Surgery, University Hospital Zurich.
- Sept. 2000- : Arab-American University-Jenin/PA.
Associate Prof. Aug. 2002
Full Prof. (Since Dec. 2007)
Senior Scientist at the Regional Research & Development - The Galilee Society.
- 2008- Present: Senior researcher and lecturer at Qasemi Research Center- Al-Qasemi Academic College, Baga Algharbiya, Israel
- November 2011-11-30 Prof. Degree from Israel Council of Higher Education

Administrative records

- 2003- 2005 Scientific director of the Regional Research & Development - The Galilee Society
- 2008-2009 Dean of scientific research at Arab-American University-Jenin/PA.
- 2010 – Present Dean of scientific research center at AlQasemi Academy
- 2012 – Present Dean of the faculty of sciences and research center at AlQasemi Academy
- 2012 – Present Head of the Higher Education Council of AlQasemi Academy
- 2012 – Present President of AlQasemi Academy

Teaching Responsibilities:

- 1984 - 1985: Teaching assistant of undergraduate students at the Institute of Zoology, University of Zurich
- 1986 - 1988: Teaching assistant of undergraduate students at the Institute of Biochemistry, University of Zurich
- 1989 - 1991: Teaching assistant of undergraduate students at the Institute of Neurobiology, ETH Zurich
Technicians master at the Institute of Neurobiology
- 1992 - 1994: Teaching assistant of undergraduate students at the Institute of Toxicology, ETH Zurich
Technicians master at the Institute of Toxicology
- 1995-2000 Teaching assistant of undergraduate and graduate students at the Institute of Polymers, ETH Zurich
- 1994 - 2000: Technicians examiner
- 2000- Professor at the AAUJ and AlQasemi Academy. Courses Taught:
1. Biology for Medical Students and Laboratory
  2. Biology I+II and Laboratory
  3. Cell Biology
  4. Immunology and Laboratory
  5. In vitro Cell Culture Techniques
  6. Biochemistry I+II and Laboratory
  7. Special Topics in Biology
  8. Microbiology
  9. Quality control and Management
  10. Biological Research Methods
  11. Tissue engineering
  12. Biochemical separation methods
  13. Industrial microbiology
  14. Introduction to medicinal plants
  15. Advanced course in medicinal plants
  16. Genetics

Supervision of the biological part of the following projects:

Semester projects:

1. Lukas Müller, (1989/1990) "Growth factor induced changes in expression of cell adhesion molecules in a transformed rat Schwann cell line"
2. Andreas Tobler, (1989) "Effect of different cytokines on the expression of cell adhesion molecules of transfected Schwann cells"
3. Florence Scholl, (1991/1992) "The effect of cell-substrata interaction on the preservation and induction of cytochrome P-450 isoenzymes in cultured rat hepatocytes"
4. Malou Gengler, (1999/2000)
5. Nadia Al-Haj Yasin and Lina Maloukh (2000) Development of new cell culture system for the evaluation of medicinal plant toxicity
6. Safa Ata Malalha (2007-2008) In vitro evaluation of biosafety and efficacy of Peganum Harmala as source of new herbal-based anti-inflammatory drug
7. Osama Al-Abdalah (2006-2007) Evaluation of medicinal plants hepatotoxicity using co-cultures of hepatocytes and monocytes
8. Salsabeel Wated and Sundos Wated* (2008) The role of Hypericum Triquetrifolium -derived factors on the production levels of LPS-induced nitric oxide and tumor necrosis factor- $\alpha$  (TNF- $\alpha$ ) in co-cultures of hepatocytes and monocytes

8. Ongoing research projects:

Project “Turnstone”. A study of the cooperation between the border police and coastguards in the Baltic Sea area (financed by the European Commission). 2014 - . Description: Based on empirical material (interviews and field observations), the purpose of this project is to map and analyze how the staff of the different organizations experience, understand, and define organizational, cultural, historical, and legal differences between the different border agencies. In addition, the aim is also to map and analyze how travelers experience, interpret, and define “freedom of movement” in the Baltic Sea region regarding the border agencies.

War Sociology - Renewed Analysis of Ethnographic Material from Bosnia. 2012- . Description: In this project analyzes verbally depicted experiences of survivors from the war in Bosnia and Herzegovina. One aim of the project is to describe how the actors portray the social phenomenon of "war violence" "victimhood" and "reconciliation", and the second is to analyze discursive patterns that interplay in the creation of the terms "victim" and "perpetrator". My research question is, How do the interviewees describe war violence, victimhood and reconciliation after the war? In this project, I try to access the phenomena of "war violence" "victimhood" and "reconciliation" by analyzing the interviewees' stories, namely their own descriptions in relation to themselves and others.

Successful collaboration. Described and Observed Experiences of Youth Care (financed by the Swedish National Board of Institutional Care). 2012- . Description: Previous collaboration research shows that problems and conflicts sometimes arise as a part of collaboration. This project analyzing successful cooperation, even if it unfolds during shorter interaction sequences. In this study I endeavor to describe the contributing factors that are necessary to achieve the phenomenon of a successful collaboration. I do this partially with help from studies published in the literature, but especially by analyzing my own empirical material: narratives from the interviewees and field notes. The aim is to analyze how and when the actors within youth care portray successful cooperation, and which discursive and interactive patterns are involved in the construction of this phenomenon.

9. Completed research projects:

Policing Ethnicity in a Diversified Sweden (financed by the Swedish Research Council for Health, Working Life and Welfare, FORTE). 2011-2013. Description: Previous research has emphasized the institutional racism in total institutions. Researchers have highlighted the importance of narratives but have not focused on narratives about ethnic monitoring and social control. This study tries to fill this gap by analysing stories related to descriptions of ethnic monitoring and social control as told by juveniles of non-Swedish ethnicity in Swedish juvenile care institutions. A juvenile's ethnicity was highlighted by drawing attention to the staff's monitoring and social control. Interviews elucidated the victimhood that non-Swedish juveniles portrayed in relation to the staff and/or Swedish juveniles. When juveniles of non-Swedish ethnicity described ethnic monitoring and social control, they generally distanced themselves from staff behaviour and portrayed a victim identity. In constructing their identity, juveniles sometimes used their ethnic background rhetorically when describing everyday situations in the institution. The juveniles portrayed a humiliated self through dissociation from the staff and through the descriptions that they were treated differently than Swedish juveniles.

Dissertation Project: Conflicts in the Youth-care - Accounts, Comparisons and Alliances. 2007-2012. Description: In this study a collaboration project in Swedish youth care is analysed. The aim of the project was to enhance coordination between the Social Services and the Swedish National Board of Institutional Care in order to make the efforts more efficient. The project also employed a number of coordinators. The overall purpose of this study is to analyse conflicts, alliances and comparisons identifiable in interviews and observations. The analytic findings are put into an overall "collaboration context" represented by earlier research on the social phenomenon of "collaboration". In this way the study contribute to a sociological understanding of a contemporary widespread phenomenon. The empirical materials of the study consist of recorded conversational interviews with 147 project participants (youngsters, parents and various professional categories) as well as observations of meetings, informal get-togethers and visits to institutions, Social Services offices, the head office of the National Board of Institutional Care and coordinators. The material was analysed using the analytic perspectives of Georg Simmel (1950/1964), Theodore Caplow (1968) and Erving Goffman (1959/2004). The analysis shows that the project manifested and led to struggles between organizations involving representatives from the Social Services, the National Board of Institutional Care and the project, as well as to several interpersonal conflicts between representatives from various categories of involved professionals, and the youngsters and their parents. The study also shows that the client, in such human service organizations, faces a significant risk of being marginalized. Professionals who appreciated the collaboration often drew their conclusions based on their interaction with other professionals, but the collaboration did not guarantee a successful treatment of the client.

Ethnicity in Youth-care (financed by the Swedish National Board of Institutional Care). 2009-2010. Description: The aim of this study is to analyze when and how ethnicity is actualised through categorisations in Swedish youth-care, to attract attention to how these categorisations are indicated and point out how the narrators own ethnic identity is shaped and upheld through different markings. Ethnicity is used explicitly as well as implicitly, by the youths themselves and the professionals, in peer relations within each collective and between the collectives. Usually ethnicity is used as an explanation and as an instrument in the interaction, i.e. it is used to achieve different things or to emphasize or highlight a desirable image of people or problems at hand. The professionals use ethnicity to explain the youths actions, they also compare themselves to colleagues regarding who displays the greatest ethnic consideration or who knows most about ethnicity. Ethnicity then becomes a resource in presenting one-self: you present yourself as, for instance, “culturally competent” in relation to others. The youths also use ethnicity when they talk about the placing at various institutions, the social control at the institution, discrimination, love relations, etc. The life in the institution becomes ethnically charged in interviews with youngsters, but this perspective is not always shared by other actors. Treatments interpreted as ethnic discrimination by the youths are sometimes seen as self-inflicted by the staff, e.g. as a result of alleged inappropriate behaviour. Ethnicity is a contested marker in this context and thus a potential weapon in the interplay. This is specially highlighted through ethnically coloured profanity and name-calling which the youths experience as an instrument of humiliation.

Process evaluation regarding the project ”Counteract violence and gangs” (financed by the Swedish National Board of Institutional Care). 2007-2009. Description: This study concerns a large evaluation of a project concerning Swedish juvenile care. We analyse how professionals, youngsters and parents perceived and interpreted the three-year project which involved different authorities whose representatives should form a care-giving chain. The project also employed a number of coordinators. Beyond accounting for the results from just over one hundred interviews and an intense field work our ambition was also to place our findings in a greater social and cultural context. The origin of our analysis is based upon the empirical material, not from a before hand constructed perspective; the example of the coordinators’ focus on administrative issues was therefore discovered through interviews and observations and not something that we were looking for or even expecting to find.

Reconciliation and Implacability in Stories of Former Prison-Camp Detainees (financed by the Scandinavian Research Council for Criminology). 2006-2007. Description: Is it possible for civilians, who have been targets of war action, to reconcile with their former enemies? In this study I am analyzing the stories told by former camp-prisoners who were imprisoned at the beginning of the Bosnia-Herzegovina war in the early 1990's. These prisoners were detained in the concentration-camps of Omarska, Keraterm and Manjača. The former prisoners took refuge in the Nordic countries after the war. The aim of the study is partly to analyze traces of reconciliation and implacability, and partly to detect and describe the rituals of interaction that emerged during the war, which have been revised and reinterpreted after the war. The study is based on 13 interviews with former camp-prisoners and their close relatives who now live in Sweden, Denmark and Norway. Added to the study is a document analysis of verdicts by the Hague-tribunal and UN reports.
