

LUND UNIVERSITY

Hate and Threats Against Journalists

Consequences for Freedom of Speech and Democracy

Björkenfeldt, Oscar

2020

Link to publication

Citation for published version (APA):

Björkenfeldt, O. (2020). Hate and Threats Against Journalists: Consequences for Freedom of Speech and Democracy. Abstract from Law and Digital Society: Re-Imagining the Futures, Lund, Sweden.

Total number of authors:

1

General rights

Unless other specific re-use rights are stated the following general rights apply:

Copyright and moral rights for the publications made accessible in the public portal are retained by the authors and/or other copyright owners and it is a condition of accessing publications that users recognise and abide by the legal requirements associated with these rights.

- Users may download and print one copy of any publication from the public portal for the purpose of private study or research.
- You may not further distribute the material or use it for any profit-making activity or commercial gain
- You may freely distribute the URL identifying the publication in the public portal

Read more about Creative commons licenses: <https://creativecommons.org/licenses/>

Take down policy

If you believe that this document breaches copyright please contact us providing details, and we will remove access to the work immediately and investigate your claim.

LUND UNIVERSITY

PO Box 117
221 00 Lund
+46 46-222 00 00

Hate and Threats Against Journalists: Consequences for Freedom of Speech and Democracy

Author: Oscar Björkenfeldt

Law and Digital Society: Re-Imagining the Futures,
Annual meeting Research Committee on Sociology of Law
Lund, Sweden 24-26 August 2020

The more considerable corpus of research conducted on early Internet research uncritically ascribed high hopes for the democratic potential of new technologies (e.g., Etzioni & Etzioni, 1997; Grossman, 1995). It is now commonly understood that the Internet, although providing unprecedented access to information, is awash with regressive content (e.g., Lee, 2015; Turner, 2018). With this in mind, it is deeply problematic that digital environments are frequently perceived as spaces of exception for crime victims to obtain state protection (Citron, 2014). Thereupon, during the last ten years, journalists' exposure to online hate has been addressed in academic literature as a global phenomenon that is effective in silencing journalists and, thus, a significant concern for democratic societies (e.g., Binns, 2017; Chen et al., 2018; Löfgren Nilsson & Örnebring, 2016; Obermaier et al., 2018).

This paper will discuss journalists' vulnerability as crime victims in the digital society, and the potential implications of the professions' freedom of speech and democratic values in a broader societal context. So far, very little attention has been given to this issue from a broader democratic viewpoint. Hence, this PhD-project will, from a socio-legal perspective, focus on; (1) how journalists are affected by online hate and threats associated to an understanding of how they perceive the situation, (2) how the public opinion formation is affected by hate and threats by adopting a socio-psychological approach to self-censorship, and (3) the legal challenges concerning online hate and threats. In this paper, I will present findings from a systematic literature review and preliminary results of survey study concerning exposure to hate and threats, psychosocial work environment, and self-censorship amongst a representative sample of active journalists in Sweden.